'There's absolutely no direction,' one Fox host told me. Without Ailes's daily talking points to guide them, producers are freer than ever before to program their shows, and the surest path to ratings success is airing stories that appeal to Trump's most fervent supporters. Fox may be Trump's safe space, but Trump is Fox's safe space, too. It's a circular feedback loop."

Although he flirted with running as an independent decades ago, and as a Republican in 2012, he was never driven by a vision, an agenda or a set of goals. He gave every indication of wanting to win the presidency but not be the President. That impression, and so much more, is brought to life in Michael Wolff's explosive and controversial new book[.]"

In [2009] Democrats held 57 percent of the heartland's seats in the U.S. House of Representatives. Now: 39 percent. In 2008, Barack Obama won seven of the eight heartland states. In 2012, he won six. In 2016? Trump won six. There are 737 counties in the Midwest — Trump won all but 63 of them. ... From the Appalachian regions of Ohio to the Iron Range of Minnesota and the northern reaches of Michigan and Wisconsin, across Iowa and Missouri and through the southern swaths of Indiana and Illinois — areas in which Bill Clinton triumphed and Hillary Clinton tanked — the quotes from the 72 rural Democrats [Robin] Johnson interviewed read like a pent-up primal scream. 'If we don't get this right in the next two cycles,' he told me, 'we're done' — rendered mostly powerless in Congress and in heartland state houses. He called the report 'a cold reality check.'"

-- Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan (R) maintains a 71 percent approval rating, which could make it difficult for any Democrat to unseat him in this year's gubernatorial race. Josh Hicks and Scott Clement report <https://s2.washingtonpost.com/2fa315/5a58b999fe1ff6657b1b700c/dHJIYXJkb25AcmV2ZXJlcG9saWNILm9yZw%3D%3D/131/143/b16b7aa0684c75e9398c03c652c596ab> : "Hogan has double-digit leads in the [Gonzales Media and Research Services] poll in direct matchups with the top three Democratic candidates for governor: Prince George's County executive Rushern L. Baker III, Baltimore County Executive Kevin Kamenetz and former NAACP president Ben Jealous. ... In a theoretical matchup against Baker, 47 percent of respondents said they would vote for Hogan, compared with 37 percent for Baker and 16 percent who were undecided. The governor led Kamenetz 48 percent to 34 percent, with 18 percent undecided. Hogan led Jealous 49 percent to 36 percent, with 15 percent undecided."

-- Thirty-eight women now sit in Virginia's House of Delegates, hitting a record high. influx of young recruits into gangs, Kentucky lawmakers advanced a bill Wednesday that would toughen sentences for luring children into the groups." The bill, which was approved by the state House Judiciary Committee, "would make it a felony for adults to recruit young gang members, and require them to serve most of their sentences." The bill's sponsor, state Rep. Robert Benvenuti III, said it would "protect some of Kentucky's most vulnerable children, and significantly reduce the carnage and human suffering that directly flows...from gang criminal activity."

"voted Wednesday to set penalties for people who lure others into gang activities." If the bill becomes law, then "luring a young person into gang activity would be a form of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," which is punishable by up to a year in jail. The bill now proceeds to the state House for further debate.

proposing a bill that would "restrict a gun accessory a shooter used in a Las Vegas attack that killed dozens last year." State Sen. Greg Taylor "submitted a bill that would make the possession of a 'multiburst trigger activator' a Class A misdemeanor." If an individual has a prior conviction, then the crime would become a felony. The devices, "which include bump stocks and trigger cranks, pull the trigger on a gun at a faster rate than a person would be able to do so without the device, simulating a fully automatic weapon, according to Taylor and his bill."

(2/7, Goodman) reports that "the subway turnstile - low enough to vault, ubiquitous enough to figure in the lives of millions of New Yorkers each day - has long served as a kind of dragnet" for NYPD officers who detain those who skip the fare, but lately, "these rotating entry points and those who jump them have become stumbling blocks for Mayor Bill de Blasio, who despite his liberal credentials, has been vocally opposed to the Manhattan district attorney's office's new policy of declining to prosecute most who are arrested over fare evasion." De Blasio, "has adamantly defended the police practice of using evasion of the $2.75 fare as a means for officers to check the names and warrants of those they stop." He has been "unpersuaded by critics on the left who believe the approach" is "a form of biased and overly aggressive policing akin to stop-and-frisk."

(2/7, Leathers) notes that the FBI "includes Atlanta among the top 14 cities in the U.S. for the sex trafficking of minors." The AJC reports that "several metro Atlanta organizations that fight sex trafficking recently held a panel at Congregation Etz Chaim to bring attention to the topic. ... Various representatives from the organizations against sex trafficking gathered with the community to not only discuss the definition of sex trafficking, but how sexting, social media and pornography are used as tools by sexual predators to entice victims."

(2/7, Pitzl) reports that Arizona child-welfare workers will soon need court approval to remove children from their homes, but there must be exceptions for urgent circumstances. An Arizona state Senate panel on Wednesday will consider a bill that defines what are called the "exigent circumstances" - when the situation is so dire there is no time to get before a judge and obtain a warrant. A proposed bill "states such circumstances would arise when there is probable cause to believe a child would face serious harm in the time it would take to get the situation before a Juvenile Court judge."

988-e317&l=018-399&t=c> (2/7, Lynch) reports the US Justice Department on Wednesday announced that it had indicted 36 people accused of trafficking in stolen identities in a global cybercrime ring that caused more than $530 million in losses to consumers. Reuters reports that the crime ring, an online forum known as "Infraud," ran a "sophisticated scheme that facilitated the purchase and sale of Social Security numbers, birthdays and passwords that had been stolen from around the world," according to the Justice Department. The indictment said that among the stolen items advertised for sale on the forum were 795,000 HSBC bank logins, "dozens of PayPal logins and credentials," and credit card numbers. Users could also advertise the sale of malware on the site.

The group "used an online forum to buy and sell stolen credit card and bank account numbers, Social Security numbers and other personal information, the U.S. Justice Department said." Investigators "believe the group's nearly 11,000 members targeted more than 4.3 million credit cards, debit cards and bank accounts worldwide, Deputy Assistant Attorney General David Rybicki said."

According to Ars Technica, "administrators also meted out punishments to members who broke rules and to members of rival criminal groups," and "lower down were super moderators and moderators who served as subject-matter experts over specific topics or regions." <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=006-170&t=c>> (2/7, Schreiner) reports, "Hoping to stop the influx of young recruits into gangs, Kentucky lawmakers advanced a bill Wednesday that would toughen sentences for luring children into the groups." The bill, which was approved by the state House Judiciary Committee, "would make it a felony for adults to recruit young gang members, and require them to serve most of their sentences." The bill's sponsor, state Rep. Robert Benvenuti III, said it would "protect some of Kentucky's most vulnerable children, and significantly reduce the carnage and human suffering that directly flows...from gang criminal activity."

"voted Wednesday to set penalties for people who lure others into gang activities." If the bill becomes law, then "luring a young person into gang activity would be a form of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," which is punishable by up to a year in jail. The bill now proceeds to the state House for further debate.

proposing a bill that would "restrict a gun accessory a shooter used in a Las Vegas attack that killed dozens last year." State Sen. Greg Taylor "submitted a bill that would make the possession of a 'multiburst trigger activator' a Class A misdemeanor." If an individual has a prior conviction, then the crime would become a felony. The devices, "which include bump stocks and trigger cranks, pull the trigger on a gun at a faster rate than a person would be able to do so without the device, simulating a fully automatic weapon, according to Taylor and his bill."

New York City Mayor Battles Police Reformers Over Turnstile Jumping.

(2/7, Goodman) reports that "the subway turnstile - low enough to vault, ubiquitous enough to figure in the lives of millions of New Yorkers each day - has long served as a kind of dragnet" for NYPD officers who detain those who skip the fare, but lately, "these rotating entry points and those who jump them have become stumbling blocks for Mayor Bill de Blasio, who despite his liberal credentials, has been vocally opposed to the Manhattan district attorney's office's new policy of declining to prosecute most who are arrested over fare evasion." De Blasio, "has adamantly defended the police practice of using evasion of the $2.75 fare as a means for officers to check the names and warrants of those they stop." He has been "unpersuaded by critics on the left who believe the approach" is "a form of biased and overly aggressive policing akin to stop-and-frisk."

(2/7, Leathers) notes that the FBI "includes Atlanta among the top 14 cities in the U.S. for the sex trafficking of minors." The AJC reports that "several metro Atlanta organizations that fight sex trafficking recently held a panel at Congregation Etz Chaim to bring attention to the topic. ... Various representatives from the organizations against sex trafficking gathered with the community to not only discuss the definition of sex trafficking, but how sexting, social media and pornography are used as tools by sexual predators to entice victims."

(2/7, Pitzl) reports that Arizona child-welfare workers will soon need court approval to remove children from their homes, but there must be exceptions for urgent circumstances. An Arizona state Senate panel on Wednesday will consider a bill that defines what are called the "exigent circumstances" - when the situation is so dire there is no time to get before a judge and obtain a warrant. A proposed bill "states such circumstances would arise when there is probable cause to believe a child would face serious harm in the time it would take to get the situation before a Juvenile Court judge."

908-60af&l=018-399&t=c> (2/7, Lynch) reports the US Justice Department on Wednesday announced that it had indicted 36 people accused of trafficking in stolen identities in a global cybercrime ring that caused more than $530 million in losses to consumers. Reuters reports that the crime ring, an online forum known as "Infraud," ran a "sophisticated scheme that facilitated the purchase and sale of Social Security numbers, birthdays and passwords that had been stolen from around the world," according to the Justice Department. The indictment said that among the stolen items advertised for sale on the forum were 795,000 HSBC bank logins, "dozens of PayPal logins and credentials," and credit card numbers. Users could also advertise the sale of malware on the site.

The group "used an online forum to buy and sell stolen credit card and bank account numbers, Social Security numbers and other personal information, the U.S. Justice Department said." Investigators "believe the group's nearly 11,000 members targeted more than 4.3 million credit cards, debit cards and bank accounts worldwide, Deputy Assistant Attorney General David Rybicki said."

Policing & Policy

Kentucky, Mississippi Advance Legislation To Penalize Gang Recruitment.

The AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=004-68f&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=005-71b&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=006-170&t=c> Share to Twitter (2/7, Schreiner) reports, "Hoping to stop the influx of young recruits into gangs, Kentucky lawmakers advanced a bill Wednesday that would toughen sentences for luring children into the groups." The bill, which was approved by the state House Judiciary Committee, "would make it a felony for adults to recruit young gang members, and require them to serve most of their sentences." The bill's sponsor, state Rep. Robert Benvenuti III, said it would "protect some of Kentucky's most vulnerable children, and significantly reduce the carnage and human suffering that directly flows...from gang criminal activity."

In separate coverage, the <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=007-015&t=c> AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=008-e41&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=009-dfd&t=c> Share to Twitter (2/7) reports the Mississippi state Senate "voted Wednesday to set penalties for people who lure others into gang activities." If the bill becomes law, then "luring a young person into gang activity would be a form of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," which is punishable by up to a year in jail. The bill now proceeds to the state House for further debate.

Indiana Legislature Considering Bump Stock Ban.

State Sen. Greg Taylor "submitted a bill that would make the possession of a 'multiburst trigger activator' a Class A misdemeanor." If an individual has a prior conviction, then the crime would become a felony. The devices, "which include bump stocks and trigger cranks, pull the trigger on a gun at a faster rate than a person would be able to do so without the device, simulating a fully automatic weapon, according to Taylor and his bill."

New York City Mayor Battles Police Reformers Over Turnstile Jumping.

De Blasio, "has adamantly defended the police practice of using evasion of the $2.75 fare as a means for officers to check the names and warrants of those they stop." He has been "unpersuaded by critics on the left who believe the approach" is "a form of biased and overly aggressive policing akin to stop-and-frisk."

Atlanta-Area Groups Meet To Discuss Combating Human Trafficking.

The AJC reports that "several metro Atlanta organizations that fight sex trafficking recently held a panel at Congregation Etz Chaim to bring attention to the topic. ... Various representatives from the organizations against sex trafficking gathered with the community to not only discuss the definition of sex trafficking, but how sexting, social media and pornography are used as tools by sexual predators to entice victims."

Arizona Senate Panel To Debate Rule To Remove Children In Emergencies.

An Arizona state Senate panel on Wednesday will consider a bill that defines what are called the "exigent circumstances" - when the situation is so dire there is no time to get before a judge and obtain a warrant. A proposed bill "states such circumstances would arise when there is probable cause to believe a child would face serious harm in the time it would take to get the situation before a Juvenile Court judge."

US Justice Department Indicts Members Of Global Cybercrime Ring.

Reuters <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=016-489&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=017-322&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=018-399&t=c> Share to Twitter (2/7, Lynch) reports the US Justice Department on Wednesday announced that it had indicted 36 people accused of trafficking in stolen identities in a global cybercrime ring that caused more than $530 million in losses to consumers. Reuters reports that the crime ring, an online forum known as "Infraud," ran a "sophisticated scheme that facilitated the purchase and sale of Social Security numbers, birthdays and passwords that had been stolen from around the world," according to the Justice Department. The indictment said that among the stolen items advertised for sale on the forum were 795,000 HSBC bank logins, "dozens of PayPal logins and credentials," and credit card numbers. Users could also advertise the sale of malware on the site.

The AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=019-965&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=01a-790&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7963908-60af&l=01b-686&t=c> Share to Twitter (2/7, Balsamo) reports that the Infraud Organization was "founded in 2010 and operated under the slogan 'In Fraud We Trust.'" The group "used an online forum to buy and sell stolen credit card and bank account numbers, Social Security numbers and other personal information, the U.S. Justice Department said." Investigators "believe the group's nearly 11,000 members targeted more than 4.3 million credit cards, debit cards and bank accounts worldwide, Deputy Assistant Attorney General David Rybicki said."

According to Ars Technica, "administrators also meted out punishments to members who broke rules and to members of rival criminal groups," and "lower down were super moderators and moderators who served as subject-matter experts over specific topics or regions." Vendors "sold illicit goods or services to either VIP or regular members."

Law Enforcement Arrested 43 In Minnesota Sex-Trafficking Operation Prior To Super Bowl.

According to the Post, "the NYPD and federal firearms, drug enforcement and immigration agents have so far indicted 25 members of the so-called 'Hooly Gang,' a drug crew that operated in the neighborhood of Fox Street and Leggett Avenue, authorities said." The Post adds that "gang members protected their turf through multiple shootings, including some resulting in death, federal prosecutors said." The investigation "included the NYPD's Bronx Gang Squad, and the New York offices of the Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives Bureau, the Drug Enforcement Administration and US Immigration and Customs Enforcement."

The glasses are "connected to an internal database of suspects, meaning officers can quickly scan crowds while looking for fugitives." Police have already used the sunglasses at a busy train station to capture seven suspects on a range of crimes. The technology "allows police officers to take a photograph of a suspicious individual and then compare it to pictures stored in an internal database."

Policing & Policy

Kentucky, Mississippi Advance Legislation To Penalize Gang Recruitment.

The AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=004-68f&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=005-71b&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=006-170&t=c> Share to Twitter (2/7, Schreiner) reports, "Hoping to stop the influx of young recruits into gangs, Kentucky lawmakers advanced a bill Wednesday that would toughen sentences for luring children into the groups." The bill, which was approved by the state House Judiciary Committee, "would make it a felony for adults to recruit young gang members, and require them to serve most of their sentences." The bill's sponsor, state Rep. Robert Benvenuti III, said it would "protect some of Kentucky's most vulnerable children, and significantly reduce the carnage and human suffering that directly flows...from gang criminal activity."

In separate coverage, the <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=007-015&t=c> AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=008-e41&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=009-dfd&t=c> Share to Twitter (2/7) reports the Mississippi state Senate "voted Wednesday to set penalties for people who lure others into gang activities." If the bill becomes law, then "luring a young person into gang activity would be a form of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," which is punishable by up to a year in jail. The bill now proceeds to the state House for further debate.

Indiana Legislature Considering Bump Stock Ban.

State Sen. Greg Taylor "submitted a bill that would make the possession of a 'multiburst trigger activator' a Class A misdemeanor." If an individual has a prior conviction, then the crime would become a felony. The devices, "which include bump stocks and trigger cranks, pull the trigger on a gun at a faster rate than a person would be able to do so without the device, simulating a fully automatic weapon, according to Taylor and his bill."

New York City Mayor Battles Police Reformers Over Turnstile Jumping.

De Blasio, "has adamantly defended the police practice of using evasion of the $2.75 fare as a means for officers to check the names and warrants of those they stop." He has been "unpersuaded by critics on the left who believe the approach" is "a form of biased and overly aggressive policing akin to stop-and-frisk."

Atlanta-Area Groups Meet To Discuss Combating Human Trafficking.

The AJC reports that "several metro Atlanta organizations that fight sex trafficking recently held a panel at Congregation Etz Chaim to bring attention to the topic. ... Various representatives from the organizations against sex trafficking gathered with the community to not only discuss the definition of sex trafficking, but how sexting, social media and pornography are used as tools by sexual predators to entice victims."

Arizona Senate Panel To Debate Rule To Remove Children In Emergencies.

An Arizona state Senate panel on Wednesday will consider a bill that defines what are called the "exigent circumstances" - when the situation is so dire there is no time to get before a judge and obtain a warrant. A proposed bill "states such circumstances would arise when there is probable cause to believe a child would face serious harm in the time it would take to get the situation before a Juvenile Court judge."

US Justice Department Indicts Members Of Global Cybercrime Ring.

Reuters <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=016-489&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=017-322&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=018-399&t=c> Share to Twitter (2/7, Lynch) reports the US Justice Department on Wednesday announced that it had indicted 36 people accused of trafficking in stolen identities in a global cybercrime ring that caused more than $530 million in losses to consumers. Reuters reports that the crime ring, an online forum known as "Infraud," ran a "sophisticated scheme that facilitated the purchase and sale of Social Security numbers, birthdays and passwords that had been stolen from around the world," according to the Justice Department. The indictment said that among the stolen items advertised for sale on the forum were 795,000 HSBC bank logins, "dozens of PayPal logins and credentials," and credit card numbers. Users could also advertise the sale of malware on the site.

The AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=019-965&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=01a-790&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7972275-66fe&l=01b-686&t=c> Share to Twitter (2/7, Balsamo) reports that the Infraud Organization was "founded in 2010 and operated under the slogan 'In Fraud We Trust.'" The

group "used an online forum to buy and sell stolen credit card and bank account numbers, Social Security numbers and other personal information, the U.S. Justice Department said." Investigators "believe the group's nearly 11,000 members targeted more than 4.3 million credit cards, debit cards and bank accounts worldwide, Deputy Assistant Attorney General David Rybicki said."

According to Ars Technica, "administrators also meted out punishments to members who broke rules and to members of rival criminal groups," and "lower down were super moderators and moderators who served as subject-matter experts over specific topics or regions." Vendors "sold illicit goods or services to either VIP or regular members."

Law Enforcement Arrested 43 In Minnesota Sex-Trafficking Operation Prior To Super Bowl.

According to the Post, "the NYPD and federal firearms, drug enforcement and immigration agents have so far indicted 25 members of the so-called 'Hooly Gang,' a drug crew that operated in the neighborhood of Fox Street and Leggett Avenue, authorities said." The Post adds that "gang members protected their turf through multiple shootings, including some resulting in death, federal prosecutors said." The investigation "included the NYPD's Bronx Gang Squad, and the New York offices of the Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives Bureau, the Drug Enforcement Administration and US Immigration and Customs Enforcement."

The glasses are "connected to an internal database of suspects, meaning officers can quickly scan crowds while looking for fugitives." Police have already used the sunglasses at a busy train station to capture seven suspects on a range of crimes. The technology "allows police officers to take a photograph of a suspicious individual and then compare it to pictures stored in an internal database."

influx of young recruits into gangs, Kentucky lawmakers advanced a bill Wednesday that would toughen sentences for luring children into the groups." The bill, which was approved by the state House Judiciary Committee, "would make it a felony for adults to recruit young gang members, and require them to serve most of their sentences." The bill's sponsor, state Rep. Robert Benvenuti III, said it would "protect some of Kentucky's most vulnerable children, and significantly reduce the carnage and human suffering that directly flows...from gang criminal activity."

"voted Wednesday to set penalties for people who lure others into gang activities." If the bill becomes law, then "luring a young person into gang activity would be a form of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," which is punishable by up to a year in jail. The bill now proceeds to the state House for further debate.

The devices, "which include bump stocks and trigger cranks, pull the trigger on a gun at a faster rate than a person would be able to do so without the device, simulating a fully automatic weapon, according to Taylor and his bill."

turnstile - low enough to vault, ubiquitous enough to figure in the lives of millions of New Yorkers each day - has long served as a kind of dragnet" for NYPD officers who detain those who skip the fare, but lately, "these rotating entry points and those who jump them have become stumbling blocks for Mayor Bill de Blasio, who despite his liberal credentials, has been vocally opposed to the Manhattan district attorney's office's new policy of declining to prosecute most who are arrested over fare evasion." De Blasio, "has adamantly defended the police practice of using evasion of the $2.75 fare as a means for officers to check the names and warrants of those they stop." He has been "unpersuaded by critics on the left who believe the approach" is "a form of biased and overly aggressive policing akin to stop-and-frisk."

An Arizona state Senate panel on Wednesday will consider a bill that defines what are called the "exigent circumstances" - when the situation is so dire there is no time to get before a judge and obtain a warrant. 284-b4e6&l=018-399&t=c> (2/7, Lynch) reports the US Justice Department on Wednesday announced that it had indicted 36 people accused of trafficking in stolen identities in a global cybercrime ring that caused more than $530 million in losses to consumers. Reuters reports that the crime ring, an online forum known as "Infraud," ran a "sophisticated scheme that facilitated the purchase and sale of Social Security numbers, birthdays and passwords that had been stolen from around the world," according to the Justice Department. The indictment said that among the stolen items advertised for sale on the forum were 795,000 HSBC bank logins, "dozens of PayPal logins and credentials," and credit card numbers. Users could also advertise the sale of malware on the site.

Policing & Policy

Kentucky, Mississippi Advance Legislation To Penalize Gang Recruitment.

The AP <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8737284-b4e6&l=004-68f&t=c>> <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8737284-b4e6&l=005-71b&t=c>> Share to Facebook <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8737284-b4e6&l=006-170&t=c>> Share to Twitter (2/7, Schreiner) reports, "Hoping to stop the influx of young recruits into gangs, Kentucky lawmakers advanced a bill Wednesday that would toughen sentences for luring children into the groups." The bill, which was approved by the state House Judiciary Committee, "would make it a felony for adults to recruit young gang members, and require them to serve most of their sentences." The bill's sponsor, state Rep. Robert Benvenuti III, said it would "protect some of Kentucky's most vulnerable children, and significantly reduce the carnage and human suffering that directly flows...from gang criminal activity."

In separate coverage, the <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8737284-b4e6&l=007-015&t=c>> AP <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8737284-b4e6&l=008-e41&t=c>> Share to Facebook <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8737284-b4e6&l=009-dfd&t=c>> Share to Twitter (2/7) reports the Mississippi state Senate "voted Wednesday to set penalties for people who lure others into gang activities." If the bill becomes law, then "luring a young person into gang activity would be a form of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," which is punishable by up to a year in jail. The bill now proceeds to the state House for further debate.

Indiana Legislature Considering Bump Stock Ban.

State Sen. Greg Taylor "submitted a bill that would make the possession of a 'multiburst trigger activator' a Class A misdemeanor." If an individual has a prior conviction, then the crime would become a felony. The devices, "which include bump stocks and trigger cranks, pull the trigger on a gun at a faster rate than a person would be able to do so without the device, simulating a fully automatic weapon, according to Taylor and his bill."

New York City Mayor Battles Police Reformers Over Turnstile Jumping.

De Blasio, "has adamantly defended the police practice of using evasion of the $2.75 fare as a means for officers to check the names and warrants of those they stop." He has been "unpersuaded by critics on the left who believe the approach" is "a form of biased and overly aggressive policing akin to stop-and-frisk."

Atlanta-Area Groups Meet To Discuss Combating Human Trafficking.

The AJC reports that "several metro Atlanta organizations that fight sex trafficking recently held a panel at Congregation Etz Chaim to bring attention to the topic. ... Various representatives from the organizations against sex trafficking gathered with the community to not only discuss the definition of sex trafficking, but how sexting, social media and pornography are used as tools by sexual predators to entice victims."

Arizona Senate Panel To Debate Rule To Remove Children In Emergencies.

An Arizona state Senate panel on Wednesday will consider a bill that defines what are called the "exigent circumstances" - when the situation is so dire there is no time to get before a judge and obtain a warrant. A proposed bill "states such circumstances would arise when there is probable cause to believe a child would face serious harm in the time it would take to get the situation before a Juvenile Court judge."

Reuters reports that the crime ring, an online forum known as "Infraud," ran a "sophisticated scheme that facilitated the purchase and sale of Social Security numbers, birthdays and passwords that had been stolen from around the world," according to the Justice Department. The indictment said that among the stolen items advertised for sale on the forum were 795,000 HSBC bank logins, "dozens of PayPal logins and credentials," and credit card numbers. Users could also advertise the sale of malware on the site.

The AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8737284-b4e6&l=019-965&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8737284-b4e6&l=01a-790&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8737284-b4e6&l=01b-686&t=c> Share to Twitter (2/7, Balsamo) reports that the Infraud Organization was "founded in 2010 and operated under the slogan 'In Fraud We Trust.'" The group "used an online forum to buy and sell stolen credit card and bank account numbers, Social Security numbers and other personal information, the U.S. Justice Department said." Investigators "believe the group's nearly 11,000 members targeted more than 4.3 million credit cards, debit cards and bank accounts worldwide, Deputy Assistant Attorney General David Rybicki said."

According to the Post, "the NYPD and federal firearms, drug enforcement and immigration agents have so far indicted 25 members of the so-called 'Hooly Gang,' a drug crew that operated in the neighborhood of Fox Street and Leggett Avenue, authorities said." The Post adds that "gang members protected their turf through multiple shootings, including some resulting in death, federal prosecutors said." The investigation "included the NYPD's Bronx Gang Squad, and the New York offices of the Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives Bureau, the Drug Enforcement Administration and US Immigration and Customs Enforcement."

The glasses are "connected to an internal database of suspects, meaning officers can quickly scan crowds while looking for fugitives." Police have already used the sunglasses at a busy train station to capture seven suspects on a range of crimes. The technology "allows police officers to take a photograph of a suspicious individual and then compare it to pictures stored in an internal database."

The bill, which was approved by the state House Judiciary Committee, "would make it a felony for adults to recruit young gang members, and require them to serve most of their sentences." The bill's sponsor, state Rep. Robert Benvenuti III, said it would "protect some of Kentucky's most vulnerable children, and significantly reduce the carnage and human suffering that directly flows...from gang criminal activity."

If the bill becomes law, then "luring a young person into gang activity would be a form of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," which is punishable by up to a year in jail. The bill now proceeds to the state House for further debate.

Indiana Legislature Considering Bump Stock Ban.

State Sen. Greg Taylor "submitted a bill that would make the possession of a 'multiburst trigger activator' a Class A misdemeanor." If an individual has a prior conviction, then the crime would become a felony. The devices, "which include bump stocks and trigger cranks, pull the trigger on a gun at a faster rate than a person would be able to do so without the device, simulating a fully automatic weapon, according to Taylor and his bill."

New York City Mayor Battles Police Reformers Over Turnstile Jumping.

De Blasio, "has adamantly defended the police practice of using evasion of the $2.75 fare as a means for officers to check the names and warrants of those they stop." He has been "unpersuaded by critics on the left who believe the approach" is "a form of biased and overly aggressive policing akin to stop-and-frisk."

Atlanta-Area Groups Meet To Discuss Combating Human Trafficking.

The AJC reports that "several metro Atlanta organizations that fight sex trafficking recently held a panel at Congregation Etz Chaim to bring attention to the topic. ... Various representatives from the organizations against sex trafficking gathered with the community to not only discuss the definition of sex trafficking, but how sexting, social media and pornography are used as tools by sexual predators to entice victims."

Arizona Senate Panel To Debate Rule To Remove Children In Emergencies.

An Arizona state Senate panel on Wednesday will consider a bill that defines what are called the "exigent circumstances" - when the situation is so dire there is no time to get before a judge and obtain a warrant. A proposed bill "states such circumstances would arise when there is probable cause to believe a child would face serious harm in the time it would take to get the situation before a Juvenile Court judge."

Reuters reports that the crime ring, an online forum known as "Infraud," ran a "sophisticated scheme that facilitated the purchase and sale of Social Security numbers, birthdays and passwords that had been stolen from around the world," according to the Justice Department. The indictment said that among the stolen items advertised for sale on the forum were 795,000 HSBC bank logins, "dozens of PayPal logins and credentials," and credit card numbers. Users could also advertise the sale of malware on the site.

The

group "used an online forum to buy and sell stolen credit card and bank account numbers, Social Security numbers and other personal information, the U.S. Justice Department said." Investigators "believe the group's nearly 11,000 members targeted more than 4.3 million credit cards, debit cards and bank accounts worldwide, Deputy Assistant Attorney General David Rybicki said."

According to the Post, "the NYPD and federal firearms, drug enforcement and immigration agents have so far indicted 25 members of the so-called 'Hooly Gang,' a drug crew that operated in the neighborhood of Fox Street and Leggett Avenue, authorities said." The Post adds that "gang members protected their turf through multiple shootings, including some resulting in death, federal prosecutors said." The investigation "included the NYPD's Bronx Gang Squad, and the New York offices of the Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives Bureau, the Drug Enforcement Administration and US Immigration and Customs Enforcement."

"voted Wednesday to set penalties for people who lure others into gang activities." If the bill becomes law, then "luring a young person into gang activity would be a form of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," which is punishable by up to a year in jail. The bill now proceeds to the state House for further debate.

turnstile - low enough to vault, ubiquitous enough to figure in the lives of millions of New Yorkers each day - has long served as a kind of dragnet" for NYPD officers who detain those who skip the fare, but lately, "these rotating entry points and those who jump them have become stumbling blocks for Mayor Bill de Blasio, who despite his liberal credentials, has been vocally opposed to the Manhattan district attorney's office's new policy of declining to prosecute most who are arrested over fare evasion." De Blasio, "has adamantly defended the police practice of using evasion of the $2.75 fare as a means for officers to check the names and warrants of those they stop." He has been "unpersuaded by critics on the left who believe the approach" is "a form of biased and overly aggressive policing akin to stop-and-frisk."

436-bf99&l=018-399&t=c> (2/7, Lynch) reports the US Justice Department on Wednesday announced that it had indicted 36 people accused of trafficking in stolen identities in a global cybercrime ring that caused more than $530 million in losses to consumers. Reuters reports that the crime ring, an online forum known as "Infraud," ran a "sophisticated scheme that facilitated the purchase and sale of Social Security numbers, birthdays and passwords that had been stolen from around the world," according to the Justice Department. The indictment said that among the stolen items advertised for sale on the forum were 795,000 HSBC bank logins, "dozens of PayPal logins and credentials," and credit card numbers. Users could also advertise the sale of malware on the site.

The bill, which was approved by the state House Judiciary Committee, "would make it a felony for adults to recruit young gang members, and require them to serve most of their sentences." The bill's sponsor, state Rep. Robert Benvenuti III, said it would "protect some of Kentucky's most vulnerable children, and significantly reduce the carnage and human suffering that directly flows...from gang criminal activity."

In separate coverage, the <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7968590-e35a&l=007-015&t=c>> AP <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7968590-e35a&l=008-e41&t=c>> Share to Facebook <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=7968590-e35a&l=009-dfd&t=c>> Share to Twitter (2/7) reports the Mississippi state Senate "voted Wednesday to set penalties for people who lure others into gang activities." If the bill becomes law, then "luring a young person into gang activity would be a form of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," which is punishable by up to a year in jail. The bill now proceeds to the state House for further debate.

Indiana Legislature Considering Bump Stock Ban.

State Sen. Greg Taylor "submitted a bill that would make the possession of a 'multiburst trigger activator' a Class A misdemeanor." If an individual has a prior conviction, then the crime would become a felony. The devices, "which include bump stocks and trigger cranks, pull the trigger on a gun at a faster rate than a person would be able to do so without the device, simulating a fully automatic weapon, according to Taylor and his bill."

New York City Mayor Battles Police Reformers Over Turnstile Jumping.

De Blasio, "has adamantly defended the police practice of using evasion of the $2.75 fare as a means for officers to check the names and warrants of those they stop." He has been "unpersuaded by critics on the left who believe the approach" is "a form of biased and overly aggressive policing akin to stop-and-frisk."

Atlanta-Area Groups Meet To Discuss Combating Human Trafficking.

The AJC reports that "several metro Atlanta organizations that fight sex trafficking recently held a panel at Congregation Etz Chaim to bring attention to the topic. ... Various representatives from the organizations against sex trafficking gathered with the community to not only discuss the definition of sex trafficking, but how sexting, social media and pornography are used as tools by sexual predators to entice victims."

Arizona Senate Panel To Debate Rule To Remove Children In Emergencies.

An Arizona state Senate panel on Wednesday will consider a bill that defines what are called the "exigent circumstances" - when the situation is so dire there is no time to get before a judge and obtain a warrant. A proposed bill "states such circumstances would arise when there is probable cause to believe a child would face serious harm in the time it would take to get the situation before a Juvenile Court judge."

Reuters reports that the crime ring, an online forum known as "Infraud," ran a "sophisticated scheme that facilitated the purchase and sale of Social Security numbers, birthdays and passwords that had been stolen from around the world," according to the Justice Department. The indictment said that among the stolen items advertised for sale on the forum were 795,000 HSBC bank logins, "dozens of PayPal logins and credentials," and credit card numbers. Users could also advertise the sale of malware on the site.

The

group "used an online forum to buy and sell stolen credit card and bank account numbers, Social Security numbers and other personal information, the U.S. Justice Department said." Investigators "believe the group's nearly 11,000 members targeted more than 4.3 million credit cards, debit cards and bank accounts worldwide, Deputy Assistant Attorney General David Rybicki said."

The bill, which was approved by the state House Judiciary Committee, "would make it a felony for adults to recruit young gang members, and require them to serve most of their sentences." The bill's sponsor, state Rep. Robert Benvenuti III, said it would "protect some of Kentucky's most vulnerable children, and significantly reduce the carnage and human suffering that directly flows...from gang criminal activity."

In separate coverage, the <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8539988-e317&l=007-015&t=c>> AP <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8539988-e317&l=008-e41&t=c>> Share to Facebook <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018020801iacp&r=8539988-e317&l=009-dfd&t=c>> Share to Twitter (2/7) reports the Mississippi state Senate "voted Wednesday to set penalties for people who lure others into gang activities." If the bill becomes law, then "luring a young person into gang activity would be a form of contributing to the delinquency of a minor," which is punishable by up to a year in jail. The bill now proceeds to the state House for further debate.

Indiana Legislature Considering Bump Stock Ban.

State Sen. Greg Taylor "submitted a bill that would make the possession of a 'multiburst trigger activator' a Class A misdemeanor." If an individual has a prior conviction, then the crime would become a felony. The devices, "which include bump stocks and trigger cranks, pull the trigger on a gun at a faster rate than a person would be able to do so without the device, simulating a fully automatic weapon, according to Taylor and his bill."

New York City Mayor Battles Police Reformers Over Turnstile Jumping.

De Blasio, "has adamantly defended the police practice of using evasion of the $2.75 fare as a means for officers to check the names and warrants of those they stop." He has been "unpersuaded by critics on the left who believe the approach" is "a form of biased and overly aggressive policing akin to stop-and-frisk."

Atlanta-Area Groups Meet To Discuss Combating Human Trafficking.

The AJC reports that "several metro Atlanta organizations that fight sex trafficking recently held a panel at Congregation Etz Chaim to bring attention to the topic. ... Various representatives from the organizations against sex trafficking gathered with the community to not only discuss the definition of sex trafficking, but how sexting, social media and pornography are used as tools by sexual predators to entice victims."

Arizona Senate Panel To Debate Rule To Remove Children In Emergencies.

An Arizona state Senate panel on Wednesday will consider a bill that defines what are called the "exigent circumstances" - when the situation is so dire there is no time to get before a judge and obtain a warrant. A proposed bill "states such circumstances would arise when there is probable cause to believe a child would face serious harm in the time it would take to get the situation before a Juvenile Court judge."

Reuters reports that the crime ring, an online forum known as "Infraud," ran a "sophisticated scheme that facilitated the purchase and sale of Social Security numbers, birthdays and passwords that had been stolen from around the world," according to the Justice Department. The indictment said that among the stolen items advertised for sale on the forum were 795,000 HSBC bank logins, "dozens of PayPal logins and credentials," and credit card numbers. Users could also advertise the sale of malware on the site.

The

group "used an online forum to buy and sell stolen credit card and bank account numbers, Social Security numbers and other personal information, the U.S. Justice Department said." Investigators "believe the group's nearly 11,000 members targeted more than 4.3 million credit cards, debit cards and bank accounts worldwide, Deputy Assistant Attorney General David Rybicki said."

The glasses are "connected to an internal database of suspects, meaning officers can quickly scan crowds while looking for fugitives." Police have already used the sunglasses at a busy train station to capture seven suspects on a range of crimes. The technology "allows police officers to take a photograph of a suspicious individual and then compare it to pictures stored in an internal database."

The Internet has changed how human traffickers operate, enabling them to advertise their victims easily, anonymously, and to a large audience of buyers through various dating and relationship sites and various classified advertising platforms. This webinar, produced in partnership between Marinus Analytics and LexisNexis® Risk Solutions, will show the best tools and methods to make use of this huge amount of data to find victims and traffickers successfully. It will cover how the data from LexisNexis law enforcement solutions like Accurint® Virtual Crime Center in conjunction with Traffic Jam's artificial intelligence tools such as facial recognition through FaceSearch, can help rescue victims and complete searches in seconds. Join this webinar to gain tips and tools to make the most out of your time, to effectively find victims of human trafficking and bring their exploiters to justice.

Crime Report: Is federal funding for local cops under threat?
<<http://perf.memberclicks.net/message2/link/03dab1b3-f068-4f91-bcdc-13dd0539fae5/1>>

When the White House next Monday proposes its federal spending plan for the year starting Oct. 1, Washington insiders who have talked to officials at the Justice Department anticipate that the plan will include ending the COPS Office's more than two-decade-long run of the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) Office as an independent agency in the Department of Justice (DOJ). Instead, COPS would be placed within the Justice Department's Office of Justice Programs (OJP), and its grant-making authority would be given to an agency that long has awarded a wide variety of funds to state and local governments, the Bureau of Justice Assistance.

Later this month, Supreme Court justices will hear a case involving Microsoft's heated dispute with federal prosecutors over whether it must turn over data currently hosted in a storage facility in Ireland. At the heart of the legal dispute is whether U.S. courts can compel a company to turn over an individual's data when it is held overseas. The case has drawn intense global interest, including more than a dozen legal briefs to the Supreme Court from abroad, in a sign that some parties believe a ruling may offer a future road map for the internet.

<<http://perf.memberclicks.net/message2/link/03dab1b3-f068-4f91-bcdc-13dd0539fae5/3>>

Acting Baltimore Police Commissioner Darryl De Sousa has filled his top command staff with veteran Baltimore cops - including retirees he recruited to return - who he says will restore lost pride in the troubled department while also steering it to a better future. Right at the top, as his two deputy commissioners, are retirees: Andre Bonaparte as deputy commissioner of support services and Thomas Cassella as deputy commissioner of operations.

<<http://perf.memberclicks.net/message2/link/03dab1b3-f068-4f91-bcdc-13dd0539fae5/4>>

Jurors are now deliberating in the federal trial of two Baltimore police officers who are charged with rampant corruption, in a case that has brought forth stunning allegations of misconduct in the department. The case centers on the Gun Trace Task Force, an elite unit that was supposed to be taking illegal guns off the street. Instead, witnesses say its members were reselling the guns and drugs it seized right back onto the streets. Only one member of the task force wasn't charged. Of the eight officers who were indicted, six pleaded guilty, and four testified in this case as government witnesses.

Appleton Post Crescent: Appleton police hope to expand opioid program launched last year

<<http://perf.memberclicks.net/message2/link/03dab1b3-f068-4f91-bcdc-13dd0539fae5/5>>

As the first anniversary of the Law Enforcement Addiction Assistance Program approaches, Appleton police are thinking about how to encourage more people struggling with addiction to come to them for help. It might seem counter-intuitive for someone using an illegal substance to turn to those charged with enforcing laws, acknowledged community liaison officer Sean Kuether, who launched the program at the Appleton Police Department. But, he said, the voluntary program, known as L.E.A.A.P., turns on its head the notion that law enforcement and those struggling with addiction are pitted against each other. It instead seeks to make police the first contact in that moment when someone wants to stop using.

The Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission wants alcohol delivery people to be on the lookout for signs of human trafficking in TABC-licensed bars, restaurants and liquor stores. "There are a number of human trafficking warning signs beyond just those visible in a public area" of an establishment, said TABC spokesman Chris Porter. "For example, sleeping or living areas which shouldn't be present in the back portion of a business, locked or padlocked doors that seem out of place, owners who might restrict a delivery employee's access to areas where they would otherwise be allowed to go."

Chicago Sun-Times: Los Angeles-style policing driving down Chicago shootings, city's experts say

<<http://perf.memberclicks.net/message2/link/03dab1b3-f068-4f91-bcdc-13dd0539fae5/7>>

Sean Malinowski was torn between two cities last year: chief of staff to Los Angeles police Chief Charlie Beck and $250-an-hour consultant to the Chicago Police Department, helping create new, high-tech crime-fighting centers. Invited to Chicago by Supt. Eddie Johnson to lend his expertise after the city suffered one of its bloodiest years in decades in 2016, Malinowski was hired under a $1.1 million contract between the city and University of Chicago. The university's job: to help build and operate Strategic Decision Support Centers, where cops and civilian analysts monitor gunshot detectors, surveillance cameras and other data to pinpoint where crimes occur and where they might happen next. In essence, Malinowski's job was to show the Chicago department how to use its own technology to fight crime, L.A.-style.

<http://perf.memberclicks.net/message2/link/03dab1b3-f068-4f91-bcdc-13dd0539fae5/8>

When your crime is no longer considered a crime, should it still count against you? Not when the crime is small-time marijuana possession, Seattle Mayor Jenny Durkan and City Attorney Pete Holmes said Thursday. Since Washington legalized marijuana in 2012, some people have been stuck with criminal records for misdemeanor pot convictions while watching others make killings off the business of selling legal weed. So Seattle will move to go back and vacate misdemeanor marijuana-possession convictions prosecuted by the city before legalization, Durkan and Holmes said.

Crime Report: Is federal funding for local cops under threat?
<http://perf.memberclicks.net/message2/link/48180ec8-cf17-40a4-9cca-ee880d67c405/1>

When the White House next Monday proposes its federal spending plan for the year starting Oct. 1, Washington insiders who have talked to officials at the Justice Department anticipate that the plan will include ending the COPS Office's more than two-decade-long run of the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) Office as an independent agency in the Department of Justice (DOJ). Instead, COPS would be placed within the Justice Department's Office of Justice Programs (OJP), and its grant-making authority would be given to an agency that long has awarded a wide variety of funds to state and local governments, the Bureau of Justice Assistance.

Later this month, Supreme Court justices will hear a case involving Microsoft's heated dispute with federal prosecutors over whether it must turn over data currently hosted in a storage facility in Ireland. At the heart of the legal dispute is whether U.S. courts can compel a company to turn over an individual's data when it is held overseas. The case has drawn intense global interest, including more than a dozen legal briefs to the Supreme Court from abroad, in a sign that some parties believe a ruling may offer a future road map for the internet.

Acting Baltimore Police Commissioner Darryl De Sousa has filled his top command staff with veteran Baltimore cops - including retirees he recruited to return - who he says will restore lost pride in the troubled department while also steering it to a better future. Right at the top, as his two deputy commissioners, are retirees: Andre Bonaparte as deputy commissioner of support services and Thomas Cassella as deputy commissioner of operations.

Jurors are now deliberating in the federal trial of two Baltimore police officers who are charged with rampant corruption, in a case that has brought forth stunning allegations of misconduct in the department. The case centers on the Gun Trace Task Force, an elite unit that was supposed to be taking illegal guns off the street. Instead, witnesses say its members were reselling the guns and drugs it seized right back onto the streets. Only one member of the task force wasn't charged. Of the eight officers who were indicted, six pleaded guilty, and four testified in this case as government witnesses.

Sean Malinowski was torn between two cities last year: chief of staff to Los Angeles police Chief Charlie Beck and $250-an-hour consultant to the Chicago Police Department, helping create new, high-tech crime-fighting centers. Invited to Chicago by Supt. Eddie Johnson to lend his expertise after the city suffered one of its bloodiest years in decades in 2016, Malinowski was hired under a $1.1 million contract between the city and University of Chicago. The university's job: to help build and operate Strategic Decision Support Centers, where cops and civilian analysts monitor gunshot detectors, surveillance cameras and other data to pinpoint where crimes occur and where they might happen next. In essence, Malinowski's job was to show the Chicago department how to use its own technology to fight crime, L.A.-style.

When your crime is no longer considered a crime, should it still count against you? Not when the crime is small-time marijuana possession, Seattle Mayor Jenny Durkan and City Attorney Pete Holmes said Thursday. Since Washington legalized marijuana in 2012, some people have been stuck with criminal records for misdemeanor pot convictions while watching others make killings off the business of selling legal weed. So Seattle will move to go back and vacate misdemeanor marijuana-possession convictions prosecuted by the city before legalization, Durkan and Holmes said.

When the White House next Monday proposes its federal spending plan for the year starting Oct. 1, Washington insiders who have talked to officials at the Justice Department anticipate that the plan will include ending the COPS Office's more than two-decade-long run of the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) Office as an independent agency in the Department of Justice (DOJ). Sean Malinowski was torn between two cities last year: chief of staff to Los Angeles police Chief Charlie Beck and $250-an-hour consultant to the Chicago Police Department, helping create new, high-tech crime-fighting centers. Invited to Chicago by Supt. Eddie Johnson to lend his expertise after the city suffered one of its bloodiest years in decades in 2016, Malinowski was hired under a $1.1 million contract between the city and University of Chicago. The university's job: to help build and operate Strategic Decision Support Centers, where cops and civilian analysts monitor gunshot detectors, surveillance cameras and other data to pinpoint where crimes occur and where they might happen next. In essence, Malinowski's job was to show the Chicago department how to use its own technology to fight crime, L.A.-style.

When your crime is no longer considered a crime, should it still count against you? Not when the crime is small-time marijuana possession, Seattle Mayor Jenny Durkan and City Attorney Pete Holmes said Thursday. Since Washington legalized marijuana in 2012, some people have been stuck with criminal records for misdemeanor pot convictions while watching others make killings off the business of selling legal weed. So Seattle will move to go back and vacate misdemeanor marijuana-possession convictions prosecuted by the city before legalization, Durkan and Holmes said.

Since the beginning of China's Lunar New Year travel season, police at Zhengzhou East Railway Station have caught seven fugitives in connection with major criminal cases and identified 26 people attempting to travel using other people's IDs, according to People's Daily, China's official state newspaper. Is federal funding for local cops under threat?

When the White House next Monday proposes its federal spending plan for the year starting Oct. 1, Washington insiders who have talked to officials at the Justice Department anticipate that the plan will include ending the COPS Office's more than two-decade-long run of the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) Office as an independent agency in the Department of Justice (DOJ). Instead, COPS would be placed within the Justice Department's Office of Justice Programs (OJP), and its grant-making authority would be given to an agency that long has awarded a wide variety of funds to state and local governments, the Bureau of Justice Assistance.

Later this month, Supreme Court justices will hear a case involving Microsoft's heated dispute with federal prosecutors over whether it must turn over data currently hosted in a storage facility in Ireland. At the heart of the legal dispute is whether U.S. courts can compel a company to turn over an individual's data when it is held overseas. The case has drawn intense global interest, including more than a dozen legal briefs to the Supreme Court from abroad, in a sign that some parties believe a ruling may offer a future road map for the internet.

Jurors are now deliberating in the federal trial of two Baltimore police officers who are charged with rampant corruption, in a case that has brought forth stunning allegations of misconduct in the department. The case centers on the Gun Trace Task Force, an elite unit that was supposed to be taking illegal guns off the street. Instead, witnesses say its members were reselling the guns and drugs it seized right back onto the streets. Only one member of the task force wasn't charged. Of the eight officers who were indicted, six pleaded guilty, and four testified in this case as government witnesses.

As the first anniversary of the Law Enforcement Addiction Assistance Program approaches, Appleton police are thinking about how to encourage more people struggling with addiction to come to them for help. It might seem counter-intuitive for someone using an illegal substance to turn to those charged with enforcing laws, acknowledged community liaison officer Sean Kuether, who launched the program at the Appleton Police Department. But, he said, the voluntary program, known as L.E.A.A.P., turns on its head the notion that law enforcement and those struggling with addiction are pitted against each other. It instead seeks to make police the first contact in that moment when someone wants to stop using.

De Sousa appoints Baltimore Police veterans and retirees to lead department to reformed future

Acting Baltimore Police Commissioner Darryl De Sousa has filled his top command staff with veteran Baltimore cops - including retirees he recruited to return - who he says will restore lost pride in the troubled department while also steering it to a better future. Right at the top, as his two deputy commissioners, are retirees: Andre Bonaparte as deputy commissioner of support services and Thomas Cassella as deputy commissioner of operations.

NPR: <http://perf.memberclicks.net/message2/link/03dab1b3-f068-4f91-bcdc-13dd0539fae5/4> After jaw-dropping testimony, Baltimore Police corruption trial heads to jury

Jurors are now deliberating in the federal trial of two Baltimore police officers who are charged with rampant corruption, in a case that has brought forth stunning allegations of misconduct in the department. The case centers on the Gun Trace Task Force, an elite unit that was supposed to be taking illegal guns off the street. Instead, witnesses say its members were reselling the guns and drugs it seized right back onto the streets. Only one member of the task force wasn't charged. Of the eight officers who were indicted, six pleaded guilty, and four testified in this case as government witnesses.

Appleton Post Crescent: <http://perf.memberclicks.net/message2/link/03dab1b3-f068-4f91-bcdc-13dd0539fae5/5> Appleton police hope to expand opioid program launched last year

As the first anniversary of the Law Enforcement Addiction Assistance Program approaches, Appleton police are thinking about how to encourage more people struggling with addiction to come to them for help. It might seem counter-intuitive for someone using an illegal substance to turn to those charged with enforcing laws, acknowledged community liaison officer Sean Kuether, who launched the program at the Appleton Police Department. But, he said, the voluntary program, known as L.E.A.A.P., turns on its head the notion that law enforcement and those struggling with addiction are pitted against each other. It instead seeks to make police the first contact in that moment when someone wants to stop using.

The Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission wants alcohol delivery people to be on the lookout for signs of human trafficking in TABC-licensed bars, restaurants and liquor stores. "There are a number of human trafficking warning signs beyond just those visible in a public area" of an establishment, said TABC spokesman Chris Porter. "For example, sleeping or living areas which shouldn't be present in the back portion of a business, locked or padlocked doors that seem out of place, owners who might restrict a delivery employee's access to areas where they would otherwise be allowed to go."

Sean Malinowski was torn between two cities last year: chief of staff to Los Angeles police Chief Charlie Beck and $250-an-hour consultant to the Chicago Police Department, helping create new, high-tech crime-fighting centers. Invited to Chicago by Supt. Eddie Johnson to lend his expertise after the city suffered one of its bloodiest years in decades in 2016, Malinowski was hired under a $1.1 million contract between the city and University of Chicago. The university's job: to help build and operate Strategic Decision Support Centers, where cops and civilian analysts monitor gunshot detectors, surveillance cameras and other data to pinpoint where crimes occur and where they might happen next. In essence, Malinowski's job was to show the Chicago department how to use its own technology to fight crime, L.A.-style.

When your crime is no longer considered a crime, should it still count against you? Not when the crime is small-time marijuana possession, Seattle Mayor Jenny Durkan and City Attorney Pete Holmes said Thursday. Since Washington legalized marijuana in 2012, some people have been stuck with criminal records for misdemeanor pot convictions while watching others make killings off the business of selling legal weed. So Seattle will move to go back and vacate misdemeanor marijuana-possession convictions prosecuted by the city before legalization, Durkan and Holmes said.

Fixed facial recognition cameras have been in use to fight public toilet paper theft and to catch beer festival-going criminals in China, and now the technology is being mounted onto wearable glasses to eliminate any blind spots for crimes. Since the beginning of China's Lunar New Year travel season, police at Zhengzhou East Railway Station have caught seven fugitives in connection with major criminal cases and identified 26 people attempting to travel using other people's IDs, according to People's Daily, China's official state newspaper. The station is the first to adopt facial recognition glasses for ID verification.

Police Scotland chief constable quits

The chief constable of Police Scotland has resigned with immediate effect. Phil Gormley had been on special leave since September amid a series of investigations into claims of gross misconduct. The Police Investigations and Review Commissioner (Pirc) had been investigating four complaints, while a further three were being assessed internally. Mr Gormley has always denied any wrongdoing. But in a statement, he said he had come to the conclusion since "events" in November that it would be impossible to resume his duties in any meaningful way ahead of his contract expiring at the end of this year, regardless of the outcome of the investigations.

The Internet has changed how human traffickers operate, enabling them to advertise their victims easily, anonymously, and to a large audience of buyers through various dating and relationship sites and various classified advertising platforms. This webinar, produced in partnership between Marinus Analytics and LexisNexis® Risk Solutions, will show the best tools and methods to make use of this huge amount of data to find victims and traffickers successfully. It will cover how the data from LexisNexis law enforcement solutions like Accurint® Virtual Crime Center in conjunction with Traffic Jam's artificial intelligence tools such as facial recognition through FaceSearch, can help rescue victims and complete searches in seconds. Join this webinar to gain tips and tools to make the most out of your time, to effectively find victims of human trafficking and bring their exploiters to justice.

Federal efforts to improve biometric identification and authentication increasingly center on facial recognition. Facial recognition technology has already improved mission delivery in dynamic situations such as: • Port-of-entry Screening • Crowd Surveillance • Cybersecurity Authentication • Counter Terrorism In each case, the speed and accuracy of the identification is critical to the success of the mission. To meet these challenges, ...

Extreme weather events have caused massive destruction across North America in recent months. In early 2018, the eastern part of the U.S. experienced a "bomb cyclone" consisting of severe cold temperatures, massive amounts of snow and lots of misery. Last summer and early fall, the Gulf Coast and Caribbean were hard hit by hurricanes during one of the most severe ...

Federal efforts to improve biometric identification and authentication increasingly center on facial recognition. Facial recognition technology has already improved mission delivery in dynamic situations such as:

- Port-of-entry Screening
- Crowd Surveillance
- Cybersecurity Authentication
- Counter Terrorism

In each case, the speed and accuracy of the identification is critical to the success of the mission. To meet these challenges, ...

We are living in an ever-present, data-driven economy. Connected devices and IoT are driving up the collection and distribution of data and creating capacity and management challenges like never before. Not only does the data need to be securely stored, it needs to be available within seconds and 24/7. CIOs and IT directors must identify and face these data management ...

Extreme weather events have caused massive destruction across North America in recent months. In early 2018, the eastern part of the U.S. experienced a "bomb cyclone" consisting of severe cold temperatures, massive amounts of snow and lots of misery. Last summer and early fall, the Gulf Coast and Caribbean were hard hit by hurricanes during one of the most severe ...

The Internet has changed how human traffickers operate, enabling them to advertise their victims easily, anonymously, and to a large audience of buyers through various dating and relationship sites and various classified advertising platforms. This webinar, produced in partnership between Marinus Analytics and LexisNexis® Risk Solutions, will show the best tools and methods to make use of this huge amount of data to find victims and traffickers successfully. It will cover how the data from LexisNexis law enforcement solutions like Accurint® Virtual Crime Center in conjunction with Traffic Jam's artificial intelligence tools such as facial recognition through FaceSearch, can help rescue victims and complete searches in seconds. Join this webinar to gain tips and tools to make the most out of your time, to effectively find victims of human trafficking and bring their exploiters to justice.

NBC News: Austin, Texas, on edge after spate of package bombs kills two dead and two others badly wounded. The latest victim was a 75-year-old woman who was listed as critical but stable with "life threatening injuries" after a package she found outside her home exploded in her arms, Police Chief Brian Manley said Monday afternoon. The woman was hurt just hours after a 17-year-old boy was killed and another woman was injured by another deadly delivery, Manley said.

The Texas capital was on edge Monday after a spate of package bombings left two Austin residents

MASS SHOOTINGS

Miami Herald: Judge orders release of Parkland school shooting videos

A judge on Monday ordered the release of video footage expected to shine another spotlight on the Broward Sheriff's Office response in the initial minutes of the Parkland school shooting that killed 17 people. The video clips, however, won't be released until noon Thursday at the earliest. That delay was to give investigators time to blur the faces of any students or witnesses who may appear in the clips.

GUN REGULATIONS

Washington Post: Sessions calls on U.S. attorneys to aggressively prosecute gun buyers who lie on background checks

Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced Monday that U.S. attorneys will more aggressively enforce the law that makes it a crime for gun buyers to lie on their federal background checks, one of several steps Justice Department officials outlined as part of the Trump administration's response to last month's deadly school shooting in Parkland, Fla. The Justice Department also will increase the presence of law enforcement officers at schools and continue to review the way law enforcement agencies respond to tips from the public, Sessions said.

IMMIGRATION

Oregon Public Broadcasting: Woodburn works against immigration rhetoric to build trust in police

Oregon's 30-year-old policy limits police from cooperating with federal immigration efforts. A number of cities and counties, including Portland, have their own policies promising immigrants protection. And that, supporters of such policies say, means immigrants with no criminal record feel comfortable calling law enforcement - even if they're calling to ask local police to protect them from federal agents.

IMMIGRATION

Des Moines Register: Op-Ed by Polk County, IA Sheriff Bill McCarthy: Polk County sheriff explains his opposition to sanctuary cities bill

The so-called sanctuary bill, Senate File 481, is working its way through the Iowa Legislature. After reading this proposed legislation, it is clear that a few of its most avid supporters are not accurately describing the bill or its ramifications.

OPIOIDS

McClatchy: Cheap, easy test to spot fentanyl in opioids could stem fatal overdoses. There's just one problem.

A fast, cheap test to see if street drugs contain fentanyl is gaining favor with researchers and drug outreach workers as a breakthrough in preventing overdoses and slowing the nation's growing death toll from opioid abuse. However, practical, safety and legal concerns about the fentanyl test strips, including those raised by the manufacturer itself, have slowed the product's usage nationally and limited its potential to change the behavior and, possibly, the lives of illicit drug users. The problem is that the company can't vouch for the product's reliability or safety as a warning system for drug users because of legal liability concerns about its unapproved usage.

BODY-WORN CAMERAS

Pittsburgh Tribune-Review: Pittsburgh police rolling out body cameras, chief to equip all officers 'ASAP'

Some Pittsburgh police officers in the department's Zone 3 began wearing body cameras last month, and Chief Scott Schubert said he hopes to roll them out to the rest of the force as soon as possible. Police across Pennsylvania have been hesitant in terms of equipping officers with body cameras because of a state wiretap law that prohibited filming inside a residence without the owner's permission. The state Senate last year, however, amended the law, clearing the way for police to wear the cameras inside homes.

MARIJUANA

Denver Post: To boost its economy, Pueblo County embraced marijuana. Now a new study reveals whether it worked.

In a groundbreaking new study, a report released Monday from researchers at Colorado State University-Pueblo finds that the marijuana industry provides a net positive economic benefit to Pueblo County, even when accounting for demands on law enforcement and social services. The report - which runs to more than 200 pages in length and examines trends in revenue, construction, marijuana use, homelessness, crime, environmental impact and other topics - finds little conclusive evidence to support arguments that marijuana legalization has caused widespread social change in the county. The report, for instance, notes anecdotes that marijuana legalization has led to higher in-migration and homelessness in the county, but ultimately concludes that data do not, at least yet, provide support for those perceptions.

HOMELESSNESS

CBS Philadelphia: Homeless encampments: Philadelphia's latest battle in war against opioids

Philadelphia city officials are developing a team of police and outreach workers to resolve a new problem related to the opioid epidemic, encampments of people living in tunnels in Kensington.

TECHNOLOGY

Florida Times-Union: Police surveillance technology under fire in appeal

It's now up to the state's appellate court to decide whether the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and local prosecutors properly handled a conviction pinned on the identification of a suspect using a controversial police surveillance technology. The First District Court of Appeals is due to break new legal ground in determining whether police are allowed to use facial recognition software to identify suspects without ever notifying them of the technology.

IMMIGRATION

San Francisco Chronicle: San Francisco's ICE spokesman quits, disputes agency's claim that 800 eluded arrest

The San Francisco spokesman for U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement resigned after the agency's recent Northern California sweep, saying he couldn't continue to do his job after Trump administration officials made false public statements about a key aspect of the operation.

San Francisco Chronicle: San Francisco's ICE spokesman quits, disputes agency's claim that 800 eluded arrest

The San Francisco spokesman for U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement resigned after the agency's recent Northern California sweep, saying he couldn't continue to do his job after Trump administration officials made false public statements about a key aspect of the operation.

The Texas capital was on edge Monday after a spate of package bombings left two Austin residents dead and two others badly wounded. The latest victim was a 75-year-old woman who was listed as critical but stable with "life threatening injuries" after a package she found outside her home exploded in her arms, Police Chief Brian Manley said Monday afternoon. The woman was hurt just hours after a 17-year-old boy was killed and another woman was injured by another deadly delivery, Manley said.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced Monday that U.S. attorneys will more aggressively enforce the law that makes it a crime for gun buyers to lie on their federal background checks, one of several steps Justice Department officials outlined as part of the Trump administration's response to last month's deadly school shooting in Parkland, Fla. The Justice Department also will increase the presence of law enforcement officers at schools and continue to review the way law enforcement agencies respond to tips from the public, Sessions said.

The so-called sanctuary bill, Senate File 481, is working its way through the Iowa Legislature. After reading this proposed legislation, it is clear that a few of its most avid supporters are not accurately describing the bill or its ramifications.

A fast, cheap test to see if street drugs contain fentanyl is gaining favor with researchers and drug outreach workers as a breakthrough in preventing overdoses and slowing the nation's growing death toll from opioid abuse. However, practical, safety and legal concerns about the fentanyl test strips, including those raised by the manufacturer itself, have slowed the product's usage nationally and limited its potential to change the behavior and, possibly, the lives of illicit drug users. The problem is that the company can't vouch for the product's reliability or safety as a warning system for drug users because of legal liability concerns about its unapproved usage.

Some Pittsburgh police officers in the department's Zone 3 began wearing body cameras last month, and Chief Scott Schubert said he hopes to roll them out to the rest of the force as soon as possible. Police across Pennsylvania have been hesitant in terms of equipping officers with body cameras because of a state wiretap law that prohibited filming inside a residence without the owner's permission. The state Senate last year, however, amended the law, clearing the way for police to wear the cameras inside homes.

Denver Post: To boost its economy, Pueblo County embraced marijuana. Now a new study reveals whether it worked.

In a groundbreaking new study, a report released Monday from researchers at Colorado State University-Pueblo finds that the marijuana industry provides a net positive economic benefit to Pueblo County, even when accounting for demands on law enforcement and social services. The report - which runs to more than 200 pages in length and examines trends in revenue, construction, marijuana use, homelessness, crime, environmental impact and other topics - finds little conclusive evidence to support arguments that marijuana legalization has caused widespread social change in the county. The report, for instance, notes anecdotes that marijuana legalization has led to higher in-migration and homelessness in the county, but ultimately concludes that data do not, at least yet, provide support for those perceptions.

It's now up to the state's appellate court to decide whether the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and local prosecutors properly handled a conviction pinned on the identification of a suspect using a controversial police surveillance technology. The First District Court of Appeals is due to break new legal ground in determining whether police are allowed to use facial recognition software to identify suspects without ever notifying them of the technology.

NBC News: Austin, Texas, on edge after spate of package bombs kills two

The Texas capital was on edge Monday after a spate of package bombings left two Austin residents dead and two others badly wounded. The latest victim was a 75-year-old woman who was listed as critical but stable with "life threatening injuries" after a package she found outside her home exploded in her arms, Police Chief Brian Manley said Monday afternoon. The woman was hurt just hours after a 17-year-old boy was killed and another woman was injured by another deadly delivery, Manley said.

MASS SHOOTINGS

Miami Herald: Judge orders release of Parkland school shooting videos

A judge on Monday ordered the release of video footage expected to shine another spotlight on the Broward Sheriff's Office response in the initial minutes of the Parkland school shooting that killed 17 people. The video clips, however, won't be released until noon Thursday at the earliest. That delay was to give investigators time to blur the faces of any students or witnesses who may appear in the clips.

GUN REGULATIONS

Washington Post: Sessions calls on U.S. attorneys to aggressively prosecute gun buyers who lie on background checks

Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced Monday that U.S. attorneys will more aggressively enforce the law that makes it a crime for gun buyers to lie on their federal background checks, one of several steps Justice Department officials outlined as part of the Trump administration's response to last month's deadly school shooting in Parkland, Fla. The Justice Department also will increase the presence of law enforcement officers at schools and continue to review the way law enforcement agencies respond to tips from the public, Sessions said.

IMMIGRATION

Oregon Public Broadcasting: Woodburn works against immigration rhetoric to build trust in police

Oregon's 30-year-old policy limits police from cooperating with federal immigration efforts. A number of cities and counties, including Portland, have their own policies promising immigrants protection. And that, supporters of such policies say, means immigrants with no criminal record feel comfortable calling law enforcement - even if they're calling to ask local police to protect them from federal agents.

IMMIGRATION

Des Moines Register: Op-Ed by Polk County, IA Sheriff Bill McCarthy: Polk County sheriff explains his opposition to sanctuary cities bill

The so-called sanctuary bill, Senate File 481, is working its way through the Iowa Legislature. After reading this proposed legislation, it is clear that a few of its most avid supporters are not accurately describing the bill or its ramifications.

---

OPIOIDS

McClatchy: Cheap, easy test to spot fentanyl in opioids could stem fatal overdoses. There's just one problem.

A fast, cheap test to see if street drugs contain fentanyl is gaining favor with researchers and drug outreach workers as a breakthrough in preventing overdoses and slowing the nation's growing death toll from opioid abuse. However, practical, safety and legal concerns about the fentanyl test strips, including those raised by the manufacturer itself, have slowed the product's usage nationally and limited its potential to change the behavior and, possibly, the lives of illicit drug users. The problem is that the company can't vouch for the product's reliability or safety as a warning system for drug users because of legal liability concerns about its unapproved usage.

---

BODY-WORN CAMERAS

Pittsburgh Tribune-Review: Pittsburgh police rolling out body cameras, chief to equip all officers 'ASAP'

Some Pittsburgh police officers in the department's Zone 3 began wearing body cameras last month, and Chief Scott Schubert said he hopes to roll them out to the rest of the force as soon as possible. Police across Pennsylvania have been hesitant in terms of equipping officers with body cameras because of a state wiretap law that prohibited filming inside a residence without the owner's permission. The state Senate last year, however, amended the law, clearing the way for police to wear the cameras inside homes.

MARIJUANA

Denver Post: To boost its economy, Pueblo County embraced marijuana. Now a new study reveals whether it worked.

In a groundbreaking new study, a report released Monday from researchers at Colorado State University-Pueblo finds that the marijuana industry provides a net positive economic benefit to Pueblo County, even when accounting for demands on law enforcement and social services. The report - which runs to more than 200 pages in length and examines trends in revenue, construction, marijuana use, homelessness, crime, environmental impact and other topics - finds little conclusive evidence to support arguments that marijuana legalization has caused widespread social change in the county. The report, for instance, notes anecdotes that marijuana legalization has led to higher in-migration and homelessness in the county, but ultimately concludes that data do not, at least yet, provide support for those perceptions.

HOMELESSNESS

CBS Philadelphia: Homeless encampments: Philadelphia's latest battle in war against opioids

Philadelphia city officials are developing a team of police and outreach workers to resolve a new problem related to the opioid epidemic, encampments of people living in tunnels in Kensington.

---

TECHNOLOGY

Florida Times-Union: Police surveillance technology under fire in appeal

It's now up to the state's appellate court to decide whether the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office and local prosecutors properly handled a conviction pinned on the identification of a suspect using a controversial police surveillance technology. The First District Court of Appeals is due to break new legal ground in determining whether police are allowed to use facial recognition software to identify suspects without ever notifying them of the technology.

---

IMMIGRATION

San Francisco Chronicle: San Francisco's ICE spokesman quits, disputes agency's claim that 800 eluded arrest

The San Francisco spokesman for U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement resigned after the agency's recent Northern California sweep, saying he couldn't continue to do his job after Trump administration officials made false public statements about a key aspect of the operation.

residents of Austin called police more than 265 times by Tuesday evening to report suspicious packages near their homes following a series of package explosions that left two people dead and two others seriously injured." Austin Police Chief Brian Manley "encouraged residents to call 911 if they found any packages on their doorsteps that they weren't expecting or did not include normal markings." USA Today says a "multi-agency investigation to find the serial bomber" has developed.

The FBI "dispatched behavioral profilers, evidence collection teams and bomb technicians." The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives "sent 30 specialists, including analysts and explosives specialists." USA Today explains that the investigation "has grown to over 100 law enforcement officials." KTBC-TV

Politico says the ruling "was not a surprise, because that court issued a stay last September allowing the bulk of the Texas law...to take effect."

The court "blocked that section of the law because it deemed the word 'endorse' to be too broad and risked subjecting local officials to punishment for speaking out against the law, a violation of the First Amendment guarantee to free speech." Officials "can be forbidden to enact or enforce such policies, the panel ruled, but a ban on endorsements violates the First Amendment." ACLU attorney Lee Gelernt "said they were considering whether to appeal and would probably make a decision this week." Volunteers "patrol their neighbourhoods and watch for crimes in progress." They also "jot down licence plates of suspicious vehicles, for example, or call 911." CBC explains that the goal of the crime-watchers is to "fill any gaps left by police who patrol large swaths of rural land." Alberta recently announced $10 million in extra funds to "deal with rural crime," as police have "said rural crime jumped 41 per cent between 2013 and 2017." The new funds are "earmarked to hire more police officers, more Crown prosecutors and to add organized crime specialists to investigative teams."

The project, called Child Exploitation Image Analytics (CHEXIA), "aims to aid investigators in dealing with the huge amounts of graphic and violent images of child abuse that they collect." Automatic facial recognition technology "can help these investigators locate both the victims and the perpetrators more quickly, officials say." Program Manager Patricia Wolfhope explained that the "number of reports received through the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) cyber tip line has grown steadily each year, from 223,374 to 326,310 to 415,650 in 2010, 2011, and 2012, respectively," and NCMEC's "analysis indicates the number of images being collected and traded by offenders worldwide continues to expand exponentially." As a result, S&T partnered with the Child Exploitation Investigations Unit at Homeland Security Investigations' Cyber Crimes Center (C3) "to explore how technology can help."

Share to Twitter (3/13, Pegoraro, Gomez) reports, "Nervous residents of Austin called police more than 265 times by Tuesday evening to report suspicious packages near their homes following a series of package explosions that left two people dead and two others seriously injured." Austin Police Chief Brian Manley "encouraged residents to call 911 if they found any packages on their doorsteps that they weren't expecting or did not include normal markings." USA Today says a "multi-agency investigation to find the serial bomber" has developed. The FBI "dispatched behavioral profilers, evidence collection teams and bomb technicians." The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives "sent 30 specialists, including analysts and explosives specialists." USA Today explains that the investigation "has grown to over 100 law enforcement officials." KTBC-TV

Share to Twitter (3/13, Weissert, Weber) reports, "Families of two people killed by package bombs left on their doorsteps in Austin knew each other and were connected through local activism in the black community, a civic leader said Tuesday. But it was not clear how they might be tied to a third household where a package bomb also exploded." Chief Manley is quoted as saying, "We're not saying that we believe terrorism or hate is in play, but we absolutely have to consider that

The Justice Department, Trump said it "was reviewing the issue and would soon move to take the devices off shelves. But at the time, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives...had reached no such conclusion." The Justice Department and ATF have since "aligned themselves with the president," and "announc[ed] on Saturday that the agency can ban bump stocks under current law."

Illinois Governor Vetoes Measure Requiring State To License Gun Dealers. Bruce Rauner on Tuesday "vetoed a bill that would have required the state to license and regulate gun shops, drawing sharp criticism from Democrats." Rauner "called the proposal 'duplicative' because the federal government already licenses firearms retailers. He said adding another layer of oversight would be costly for businesses and 'do little to improve public safety.'"

Appeals Court Overturns Injunction Blocking Texas Anti-Sanctuary Law.

Politico says the ruling "was not a surprise, because that court issued a stay last September allowing the bulk of the Texas law...to take effect."

The court "blocked that section of the law because it deemed the word 'endorse' to be too broad and risked subjecting local officials to punishment for speaking out against the law, a violation of the First Amendment guarantee to free speech." According to the News, "officials who act on limiting federal immigration enforcement, however, are still subject to punishment. 'With one exception, SB 4's provisions do not, on their face, violate the Constitution,' the court's opinion reads." Officials "can be forbidden to enact or enforce such policies, the panel ruled, but a ban on endorsements violates the First Amendment." ACLU attorney Lee Gelernt "said they were considering whether to appeal and would probably make a decision this week." Gelernt also "said his organization would also be monitoring how the law was carried out."

Volunteers "patrol their neighbourhoods and watch for crimes in progress." They also "jot down licence plates of suspicious vehicles, for example, or call 911." CBC explains that the goal of the crime-watchers is to "fill any gaps left by police who patrol large swaths of rural land." Alberta recently announced $10 million in extra funds to "deal with rural crime," as police have "said rural crime jumped 41 per cent between 2013 and 2017." The new funds are "earmarked to hire more police officers, more Crown prosecutors and to add organized crime specialists to investigative teams."

The prosecutors' announcement "came nearly a week after Cruz was indicted by a grand jury on 34 counts of premeditated murder and attempted murder for the Feb. 14 massacre, which killed 17 people and injured the same number." Attorneys for Cruz "do not contest his guilt, and they have offered to have him plead guilty if prosecutors did not seek the death penalty and instead agreed to a life sentence in prison."

The project, called Child Exploitation Image Analytics (CHEXIA), "aims to aid investigators in dealing with the huge amounts of graphic and violent images of child abuse that they collect." Automatic facial recognition technology "can help these investigators locate both the victims and the perpetrators more quickly, officials say." Program Manager Patricia Wolfhope explained that the "number of reports received through the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) cyber tip line has grown steadily each year, from 223,374 to 326,310 to 415,650 in 2010, 2011, and 2012, respectively," and NCMEC's "analysis indicates the number of images being collected and traded by offenders worldwide continues to expand exponentially." As a result, S&T partnered with the Child Exploitation Investigations Unit at Homeland Security Investigations' Cyber Crimes Center (C3) "to explore how technology can help."

Share to Twitter (3/13, Pegoraro, Gomez) reports, "Nervous residents of Austin called police more than 265 times by Tuesday evening to report suspicious packages near their homes following a series of package explosions that left two people dead and two others seriously injured." Austin Police Chief Brian Manley "encouraged residents to call 911 if they found any packages on their doorsteps that they weren't expecting or did not include normal markings." USA Today says a "multi-agency investigation to find the serial bomber" has developed. The FBI "dispatched behavioral profilers, evidence collection teams and bomb technicians." The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives "sent 30 specialists, including analysts and explosives specialists." USA Today explains that the investigation "has grown to over 100 law enforcement officials." KTBC-TV

Greg Abbott "offered $15,000 on Monday for any information leading to an arrest in the case, bringing total available rewards to $65,000."

Bombs Historically Produce "Wealth" Of Evidence. The Austin (TX) American Statesman <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=010-977&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=011-c3a&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=012-4fc&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Lindell) reports "bombings produce a wealth of physical evidence," which is "part of the reason that cases resulting in death or injury have almost always, in recent years, led to a suspect being arrested. The recovered material is checked against the ATF's Arson and Explosives National Repository and the FBI's Terrorist Explosive Device Analytical Center." The Statesman adds that "explosives experts not working on the case described a fast-moving but detail-oriented approach" to solving such cases.

San Diego Police Create New Homelessness Division.

Capt. Scott Wahl, who will run the unit, "said the division will focus on neighborhood quality-of-life issues including graffiti, crime and homelessness." He added, "It's about being proactive on crime-prevention techniques and strategies. ... We're going to have teams that will be proactive in addressing community concerns and issues."

South Carolina Debating Proposal To Increase Penalty For School Threats.

Columbia (SC) State <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=016-362&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=017-f6b&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=018-db8&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13) reports the South Carolina state Senate will "debate a proposal to toughen the penalty for threatening a school or student." The proposed legislation "would stiffen the penalties for anyone who threatens to harm or cause damage, injury or death to a student or at a school with a 'firearm or dangerous weapon.'"

US Bureau Of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms And Explosives Revisit Bump Stock Rules.

The New York Times <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=019-0d0&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=01a-14a&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=01b-305&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Watkins) reports that after the deadly school shooting in Parkland, Florida, US President Donald Trump "announced a string of changes, including a ban of so-called bump stock devices." The Justice Department, Trump said it "was reviewing the issue and would soon move to take the devices off shelves. But at the time, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives...had reached no such conclusion." The Justice Department and ATF have since "aligned themselves with the president," and "announc[ed] on Saturday that the agency can ban bump stocks under current law."

Illinois Governor Vetoes Measure Requiring State To License Gun Dealers. The Chicago Tribune <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=01c-5b6&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=01d-077&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=01e-c5a&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Garcia) reports that Illinois Gov. Bruce Rauner on Tuesday "vetoed a bill that would have required the state to license and regulate gun shops, drawing sharp criticism from Democrats." Rauner "called the proposal 'duplicative' because the federal government already licenses firearms retailers. He said adding another layer of oversight would be costly for businesses and 'do little to improve public safety.'"

Appeals Court Overturns Injunction Blocking Texas Anti-Sanctuary Law.

Politico says the ruling "was not a surprise, because that court issued a stay last September allowing the bulk of the Texas law...to take effect."

The Dallas Morning News <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=022-0bc&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=023-fb2&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=024-517&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Barragán) reports that "with the exception of a statute that would punish local officials for endorsing policies that limit federal immigration enforcement," the court "allowed the rest of the law to stand." The court "blocked that section of the law because it deemed the word 'endorse' to be too broad and risked subjecting local officials to punishment for speaking out against the law, a violation of the First Amendment guarantee to free speech." According to the News, "officials who act on limiting federal immigration enforcement, however, are still subject to punishment. 'With one exception, SB 4's provisions do not, on their face, violate the Constitution,' the court's opinion reads." The <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=025-f58&t=c> New York Times <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=026-634&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8737284-2a53&l=027-a37&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Astor) reports the appeals panel "rejected one element of the law: a clause that prohibits local officials from 'endorsing' policies that limit immigration enforcement." Officials "can be forbidden to enact or enforce such policies, the panel ruled, but a ban on endorsements violates the First Amendment." ACLU attorney Lee Gelernt "said they were considering whether to appeal and would probably make a decision this week." Gelernt also "said his organization would also be monitoring how the law was carried out."

Ontario Police To Conduct Distracted Driving Operation.

Volunteers "patrol their neighbourhoods and watch for crimes in progress." They also "jot down licence plates of suspicious vehicles, for example, or call 911." CBC explains that the goal of the crime-watchers is to "fill any gaps left by police who patrol large swaths of rural land." Alberta recently announced $10 million in extra funds to "deal with rural crime," as police have "said rural crime jumped 41 per cent between 2013 and 2017." The new funds are "earmarked to hire more police officers, more Crown prosecutors and to add organized crime specialists to investigative teams."

The prosecutors' announcement "came nearly a week after Cruz was indicted by a grand jury on 34 counts of premeditated murder and attempted murder for the Feb. 14 massacre, which killed 17 people and injured the same number." Attorneys for Cruz "do not contest his guilt, and they have offered to have him plead guilty if prosecutors did not seek the death penalty and instead agreed to a life sentence in prison."

The project, called Child Exploitation Image Analytics (CHEXIA), "aims to aid investigators in dealing with the huge amounts of graphic and violent images of child abuse that they collect." Automatic facial recognition technology "can help these investigators locate both the victims and the perpetrators more quickly, officials say." Program Manager Patricia Wolfhope explained that the "number of reports received through the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) cyber tip line has grown steadily each year, from 223,374 to 326,310 to 415,650 in 2010, 2011, and 2012, respectively," and NCMEC's "analysis indicates the number of images being collected and traded by offenders worldwide continues to expand exponentially." As a result, S&T partnered with the Child Exploitation Investigations Unit at Homeland Security Investigations' Cyber Crimes Center (C3) "to explore how technology can help."

(3/13, Pegoraro, Gomez) reports, "Nervous residents of Austin called police more than 265 times by Tuesday evening to report suspicious packages near their homes following a series of package explosions that left two people dead and two others seriously injured." Austin Police Chief Brian Manley "encouraged residents to call 911 if they found any packages on their doorsteps that they weren't expecting or did not include normal markings." USA Today says a "multi-agency investigation to find the serial bomber" has developed. The FBI "dispatched behavioral profilers, evidence collection teams and bomb technicians." The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives "sent 30 specialists, including analysts and explosives specialists." USA Today explains that the investigation "has grown to over 100 law enforcement officials." KTBC-TV

(3/13, Weissert, Weber) reports, "Families of two people killed by package bombs left on their doorsteps in Austin knew each other and were connected through local activism in the black community, a civic leader said Tuesday. But it was not clear how they might be tied to a third household where a package bomb also exploded." Chief Manley is quoted as saying, "We're not saying that we believe terrorism or hate is in play, but we absolutely have to consider that because we don't want to limit what we are investigating, what we are considering and how we are approaching this case."

The recovered material is checked against the ATF's Arson and Explosives National Repository and the FBI's Terrorist Explosive Device Analytical Center." Volunteers "patrol their neighbourhoods and watch for crimes in progress." They also "jot down licence plates of suspicious vehicles, for example, or call 911." CBC explains that the goal of the crime-watchers is to "fill any gaps left by police who patrol large swaths of rural land." Alberta recently announced $10 million in extra funds to "deal with rural crime," as police have "said rural crime jumped 41 per cent between 2013 and 2017." The new funds are "earmarked to hire more police officers, more Crown prosecutors and to add organized crime specialists to investigative teams."

The project, called Child Exploitation Image Analytics (CHEXIA), "aims to aid investigators in dealing with the huge amounts of graphic and violent images of child abuse that they collect." Automatic facial recognition technology "can help these investigators locate both the victims and the perpetrators more quickly, officials say." Program Manager Patricia Wolfhope explained that the "number of reports received through the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) cyber tip line has grown steadily each year, from 223,374 to 326,310 to 415,650 in 2010, 2011, and 2012, respectively," and NCMEC's "analysis indicates the number of images being collected and traded by offenders worldwide continues to expand exponentially." As a result, S&T partnered with the Child Exploitation Investigations Unit at Homeland Security Investigations' Cyber Crimes Center (C3) "to explore how technology can help."

"Nervous residents of Austin called police more than 265 times by Tuesday evening to report suspicious packages near their homes following a series of package explosions that left two people dead and two others seriously injured." Austin Police Chief Brian Manley "encouraged residents to call 911 if they found any packages on their doorsteps that they weren't expecting or did not include normal markings." USA Today says a "multi-agency investigation to find the serial bomber" has developed. The FBI "dispatched behavioral profilers, evidence collection teams and bomb technicians." The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives "sent 30 specialists, including analysts and explosives specialists." USA Today explains that the investigation "has grown to over 100 law enforcement officials." KTBC-TV

Share to Twitter (3/13, Weissert, Weber) reports, "Families of two people killed by package bombs left on their doorsteps in Austin knew each other and were connected through local activism in the black community, a civic leader said Tuesday. But it was not clear how they might be tied to a third household where a package bomb also exploded." Chief Manley is quoted as saying, "We're not saying that we believe terrorism or hate is in play, but we absolutely have to consider that because we don't want to limit what we are investigating, what we are considering and how we are approaching this case."

Bombs Historically Produce "Wealth" Of Evidence. The Austin (TX) American Statesman <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7972275-529a&l=010-977&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7972275-529a&l=011-c3a&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7972275-529a&l=012-4fc&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Lindell) reports "bombings produce a wealth of physical evidence," which is "part of the reason that cases resulting in death or injury have almost always, in recent years, led to a suspect being arrested. The recovered material is checked against the ATF's Arson and Explosives National Repository and the FBI's Terrorist Explosive Device Analytical Center." The Statesman adds that "explosives experts not working on the case described a fast-moving but detail-oriented approach" to solving such cases.

San Diego Police Create New Homelessness Division.

Capt. Scott Wahl, who will run the unit, "said the division will focus on neighborhood quality-of-life issues including graffiti, crime and homelessness." He added, "It's about being proactive on crime-prevention techniques and strategies. ... We're going to have teams that will be proactive in addressing community concerns and issues."

South Carolina Debating Proposal To Increase Penalty For School Threats.

The Justice Department, Trump said it "was reviewing the issue and would soon move to take the devices off shelves. But at the time, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives...had reached no such conclusion." The Justice Department and ATF have since "aligned themselves with the president," and "announc[ed] on Saturday that the agency can ban bump stocks under current law."

Illinois Governor Vetoes Measure Requiring State To License Gun Dealers. Bruce Rauner on Tuesday "vetoed a bill that would have required the state to license and regulate gun shops, drawing sharp criticism from Democrats." Rauner "called the proposal 'duplicative' because the federal government already licenses firearms retailers. He said adding another layer of oversight would be costly for businesses and 'do little to improve public safety.'"

Appeals Court Overturns Injunction Blocking Texas Anti-Sanctuary Law.

Politico says the ruling "was not a surprise, because that court issued a stay last September allowing the bulk of the Texas law...to take effect."

The court "blocked that section of the law because it deemed the word 'endorse' to be too broad and risked subjecting local officials to punishment for speaking out against the law, a violation of the First Amendment guarantee to free speech." According to the News, "officials who act on limiting federal immigration enforcement, however, are still subject to punishment. 'With one exception, SB 4's provisions do not, on their face, violate the Constitution,' the court's opinion reads." Officials "can be forbidden to enact or enforce such policies, the panel ruled, but a ban on endorsements violates the First Amendment." ACLU attorney Lee Gelernt "said they were considering whether to appeal and would probably make a decision this week." Gelernt also "said his organization would also be monitoring how the law was carried out."

Volunteers "patrol their neighbourhoods and watch for crimes in progress." They also "jot down licence plates of suspicious vehicles, for example, or call 911." CBC explains that the goal of the crime-watchers is to "fill any gaps left by police who patrol large swaths of rural land." Alberta recently announced $10 million in extra funds to "deal with rural crime," as police have "said rural crime jumped 41 per cent between 2013 and 2017." The new funds are "earmarked to hire more police officers, more Crown prosecutors and to add organized crime specialists to investigative teams."

The prosecutors' announcement "came nearly a week after Cruz was indicted by a grand jury on 34 counts of premeditated murder and attempted murder for the Feb. 14 massacre, which killed 17 people and injured the same number." Attorneys for Cruz "do not contest his guilt, and they have offered to have him plead guilty if prosecutors did not seek the death penalty and instead agreed to a life sentence in prison."

More Nations Returning Looted Artifacts.

The Monitor says the trend has "accelerated over the past decade, thanks to increased awareness of past cultural injustices and renewed respect for national sovereignty, some experts say." Since 2007, the US has "returned more than 8,000 stolen artifacts to 30 countries, including paintings from Poland, manuscripts from Peru, and dinosaur fossils from Mongolia, according to US Immigration and Customs Enforcement."

Technology

US Homeland Security Using Facial Recognition Tech To Rescue Child Exploitation Victims.

FedScoop Share to Facebook Share to Twitter (3/13, Chappellet) reports the US Department of Homeland Security's Science and Technology Directorate is "developing and testing facial recognition algorithms to help scour through images of child exploitation found on the internet and the dark web." The project, called Child Exploitation Image Analytics (CHEXIA), "aims to aid investigators in dealing with the huge amounts of graphic and violent images of child abuse that they collect." Automatic facial recognition technology "can help these investigators locate both the victims and the perpetrators more quickly, officials say." Program Manager Patricia Wolfhope explained that the "number of reports received through the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) cyber tip line has grown steadily each year, from 223,374 to 326,310 to 415,650 in 2010, 2011, and 2012, respectively," and NCMEC's "analysis indicates the number of images being collected and traded by offenders worldwide continues to expand exponentially." As a result, S&T partnered with the Child Exploitation Investigations Unit at Homeland Security Investigations' Cyber Crimes Center (C3) "to explore how technology can help."

residents of Austin called police more than 265 times by Tuesday evening to report suspicious packages near their homes following a series of package explosions that left two people dead and two others seriously injured."

Austin Police Chief Brian Manley "encouraged residents to call 911 if they found any packages on their doorsteps that they weren't expecting or did not include normal markings." USA Today says a "multi-agency investigation to find the serial bomber" has developed.

The FBI "dispatched behavioral profilers, evidence collection teams and bomb technicians."

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives "sent 30 specialists, including analysts and explosives specialists."

USA Today explains that the investigation "has grown to over 100 law enforcement officials." KTBC-TV

The recovered material is checked against the ATF's Arson and Explosives National Repository and the FBI's Terrorist Explosive Device Analytical Center." The Statesman adds that "explosives experts not working on the case described a fast-moving but detail-oriented approach" to solving such cases.

The court "blocked that section of the law because it deemed the word 'endorse' to be too broad and risked subjecting local officials to punishment for speaking out against the law, a violation of the First Amendment guarantee to free speech." Volunteers "patrol their neighbourhoods and watch for crimes in progress." They also "jot down licence plates of suspicious vehicles, for example, or call 911." CBC explains that the goal of the crime-watchers is to "fill any gaps left by police who patrol large swaths of rural land." Alberta recently announced $10 million in extra funds to "deal with rural crime," as police have "said rural crime jumped 41 per cent between 2013 and 2017." The new funds are "earmarked to hire more police officers, more Crown prosecutors and to add organized crime specialists to investigative teams."

The project, called Child Exploitation Image Analytics (CHEXIA), "aims to aid investigators in dealing with the huge amounts of graphic and violent images of child abuse that they collect." Automatic facial recognition technology "can help these investigators locate both the victims and the perpetrators more quickly, officials say." Program Manager Patricia Wolfhope explained that the "number of reports received through the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) cyber tip line has grown steadily each year, from 223,374 to 326,310 to 415,650 in 2010, 2011, and 2012, respectively," and NCMEC's "analysis indicates the number of images being collected and traded by offenders worldwide continues to expand exponentially." Share to Twitter (3/13, Pegoraro, Gomez) reports, "Nervous residents of Austin called police more than 265 times by Tuesday evening to report suspicious packages near their homes following a series of package explosions that left two people dead and two others seriously injured." Austin Police Chief Brian Manley "encouraged residents to call 911 if they found any packages on their doorsteps that they weren't expecting or did not include normal markings." USA Today says a "multi-agency investigation to find the serial bomber" has developed. The FBI "dispatched behavioral profilers, evidence collection teams and bomb technicians." The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives "sent 30 specialists, including analysts and explosives specialists." USA Today explains that the investigation "has grown to over 100 law enforcement officials." KTBC-TV

Share to Twitter (3/13, Weissert, Weber) reports, "Families of two people killed by package bombs left on their doorsteps in Austin knew each other and were connected through local activism in the black community, a civic leader said Tuesday. But it was not clear how they might be tied to a third household where a package bomb also exploded." Chief Manley is quoted as saying, "We're not saying that we believe terrorism or hate is in play, but we absolutely have to consider that because we don't want to limit what we are investigating, what we are considering and how we are approaching this case."

The Dallas Morning News <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8539988-0de7&l=00d-27a&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8539988-0de7&l=00e-c33&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8539988-0de7&l=00f-624&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Wang, Bureau) reports Austin police are "offering a $50,000 reward for information leading to an arrest" for the bombings, while Gov. Greg Abbott "offered $15,000 on Monday for any information leading to an arrest in the case, bringing total available rewards to $65,000."

Bombs Historically Produce "Wealth" Of Evidence. The recovered material is checked against the ATF's Arson and Explosives National Repository and the FBI's Terrorist Explosive Device Analytical Center." The Statesman adds that "explosives experts not working on the case described a fast-moving but detail-oriented approach" to solving such cases.

San Diego Police Create New Homelessness Division.

Capt. Scott Wahl, who will run the unit, "said the division will focus on neighborhood quality-of-life issues including graffiti, crime and homelessness." He added, "It's about being proactive on crime-prevention techniques and strategies. ... We're going to have teams that will be proactive in addressing community concerns and issues."

The proposed legislation "would stiffen the penalties for anyone who threatens to harm or cause damage, injury or death to a student or at a school with a 'firearm or dangerous weapon.'"

US Bureau Of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms And Explosives Revisit Bump Stock Rules.

The New York Times <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8539988-0de7&l=019-0d0&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8539988-0de7&l=01a-14a&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8539988-0de7&l=01b-305&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Watkins) reports that after the deadly school shooting in Parkland, Florida, US President Donald Trump "announced a string of changes, including a ban of so-called bump stock devices." The Justice Department, Trump said it "was reviewing the issue and would soon move to take the devices off shelves. But at the time, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives...had reached no such conclusion." The Justice Department and ATF have since "aligned themselves with the president," and "announc[ed] on Saturday that the agency can ban bump stocks under current law."

Illinois Governor Vetoes Measure Requiring State To License Gun Dealers. Bruce Rauner on Tuesday "vetoed a bill that would have required the state to license and regulate gun shops, drawing sharp criticism from Democrats." Rauner "called the proposal 'duplicative' because the federal government already licenses firearms retailers. He said adding another layer of oversight would be costly for businesses and 'do little to improve public safety.'"

Appeals Court Overturns Injunction Blocking Texas Anti-Sanctuary Law.

Politico says the ruling "was not a surprise, because that court issued a stay last September allowing the bulk of the Texas law...to take effect."

The Dallas Morning News <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8539988-0de7&l=022-0bc&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8539988-0de7&l=023-fb2&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=8539988-0de7&l=024-517&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Barragán) reports that "with the exception of a statute that would punish local officials for endorsing policies that limit federal immigration enforcement," the court "allowed the rest of the law to stand." The court "blocked that section of the law because it deemed the word 'endorse' to be too broad and risked subjecting local officials to punishment for speaking out against the law, a violation of the First Amendment guarantee to free speech." According to the News, "officials who act on limiting federal immigration enforcement, however, are still subject to punishment. 'With one exception, SB 4's provisions do not, on their face, violate the Constitution,' the court's opinion reads." Officials "can be forbidden to enact or enforce such policies, the panel ruled, but a ban on endorsements violates the First Amendment." ACLU attorney Lee Gelernt "said they were considering whether to appeal and would probably make a decision this week." Gelernt also "said his organization would also be monitoring how the law was carried out."

More Residents Interested In Crime-Watching In Rural Alberta.

Volunteers "patrol their neighbourhoods and watch for crimes in progress." They also "jot down licence plates of suspicious vehicles, for example, or call 911." CBC explains that the goal of the crime-watchers is to "fill any gaps left by police who patrol large swaths of rural land." Alberta recently announced $10 million in extra funds to "deal with rural crime," as police have "said rural crime jumped 41 per cent between 2013 and 2017." The new funds are "earmarked to hire more police officers, more Crown prosecutors and to add organized crime specialists to investigative teams."

Prosecutors To Seek Death Penalty For Parkland Shooting Suspect.

The Washington Post Share to Facebook Share to Twitter (3/13, Berman) reports, "Prosecutors in Broward County, Fla., said Tuesday they would seek a death sentence for Nikolas Cruz, the 19-year-old charged with the shooting rampage at a Parkland high school last month." The prosecutors' announcement "came nearly a week after Cruz was indicted by a grand jury on 34 counts of premeditated murder and attempted murder for the Feb. 14 massacre, which killed 17 people and injured the same number." Attorneys for Cruz "do not contest his guilt, and they have offered to have him plead guilty if prosecutors did not seek the death penalty and instead agreed to a life sentence in prison."

More Nations Returning Looted Artifacts.

The Christian Science Monitor Share to Facebook Share to Twitter (3/13, Haq) reports, "After centuries of cultural theft, the pendulum may be swinging toward repatriation." The Monitor says the trend has "accelerated over the past decade, thanks to increased awareness of past cultural injustices and renewed respect for national sovereignty, some experts say." Since 2007, the US has "returned more than 8,000 stolen artifacts to 30 countries, including paintings from Poland, manuscripts from Peru, and dinosaur fossils from Mongolia, according to US Immigration and Customs Enforcement."

US Homeland Security Using Facial Recognition Tech To Rescue Child Exploitation Victims.

FedScoop Share to Facebook Share to Twitter (3/13, Chappellet) reports the US Department of Homeland Security's Science and Technology Directorate is "developing and testing facial recognition algorithms to help scour through images of child exploitation found on the internet and the dark web." The project, called Child Exploitation Image Analytics (CHEXIA), "aims to aid investigators in dealing with the huge amounts of graphic and violent images of child abuse that they collect." Automatic facial recognition technology "can help these investigators locate both the victims and the perpetrators more quickly, officials say." Program Manager Patricia Wolfhope explained that the "number of reports received through the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) cyber tip line has grown steadily each year, from 223,374 to 326,310 to 415,650 in 2010, 2011, and 2012, respectively," and NCMEC's "analysis indicates the number of images being collected and traded by offenders worldwide continues to expand exponentially." As a result, S&T partnered with the Child Exploitation Investigations Unit at Homeland Security Investigations' Cyber Crimes Center (C3) "to explore how technology can help."

Delaware To Test Digital Driver's Licenses.

Share to Twitter (3/13, Pegoraro, Gomez) reports, "Nervous residents of Austin called police more than 265 times by Tuesday evening to report suspicious packages near their homes following a series of package explosions that left two people dead and two others seriously injured." Austin Police Chief Brian Manley "encouraged residents to call 911 if they found any packages on their doorsteps that they weren't expecting or did not include normal markings." USA Today says a "multi-agency investigation to find the serial bomber" has developed. The FBI "dispatched behavioral profilers, evidence collection teams and bomb technicians." The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives "sent 30 specialists, including analysts and explosives specialists." USA Today explains that the investigation "has grown to over 100 law enforcement officials." KTBC-TV

Share to Twitter (3/13, Weissert, Weber) reports, "Families of two people killed by package bombs left on their doorsteps in Austin knew each other and were connected through local activism in the black community, a civic leader said Tuesday. But it was not clear how they might be tied to a third household where a package bomb also exploded." Chief Manley is quoted as saying, "We're not saying that we believe terrorism or hate is in play, but we absolutely have to consider that because we don't want to limit what we are investigating, what we are considering and how we are approaching this case."

The recovered material is checked against the ATF's Arson and Explosives National Repository and the FBI's Terrorist Explosive Device Analytical Center." The Statesman adds that "explosives experts not working on the case described a fast-moving but detail-oriented approach" to solving such cases.

Capt. Scott Wahl, who will run the unit, "said the division will focus on neighborhood quality-of-life issues including graffiti, crime and homelessness." He added, "It's about being proactive on crime-prevention techniques and strategies. ... We're going to have teams that will be proactive in addressing community concerns and issues."

The Justice Department, Trump said it "was reviewing the issue and would soon move to take the devices off shelves. But at the time, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives...had reached no such conclusion." The Justice Department and ATF have since "aligned themselves with the president," and "announc[ed] on Saturday that the agency can ban bump stocks under current law."

Illinois Governor Vetoes Measure Requiring State To License Gun Dealers. Bruce Rauner on Tuesday "vetoed a bill that would have required the state to license and regulate gun shops, drawing sharp criticism from Democrats." Rauner "called the proposal 'duplicative' because the federal government already licenses firearms retailers. He said adding another layer of oversight would be costly for businesses and 'do little to improve public safety.'"

Appeals Court Overturns Injunction Blocking Texas Anti-Sanctuary Law.

Politico says the ruling "was not a surprise, because that court issued a stay last September allowing the bulk of the Texas law...to take effect."

The Dallas Morning News <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7968590-1c85&l=022-0bc&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7968590-1c85&l=023-fb2&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7968590-1c85&l=024-517&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Barragán) reports that "with the exception of a statute that would punish local officials for endorsing policies that limit federal immigration enforcement," the court "allowed the rest of the law to stand." The court "blocked that section of the law because it deemed the word 'endorse' to be too broad and risked subjecting local officials to punishment for speaking out against the law, a violation of the First Amendment guarantee to free speech." According to the News, "officials who act on limiting federal immigration enforcement, however, are still subject to punishment. 'With one exception, SB 4's provisions do not, on their face, violate the Constitution,' the court's opinion reads." Officials "can be forbidden to enact or enforce such policies, the panel ruled, but a ban on endorsements violates the First Amendment." ACLU attorney Lee Gelernt "said they were considering whether to appeal and would probably make a decision this week." Gelernt also "said his organization would also be monitoring how the law was carried out."

Volunteers "patrol their neighbourhoods and watch for crimes in progress." They also "jot down licence plates of suspicious vehicles, for example, or call 911." CBC explains that the goal of the crime-watchers is to "fill any gaps left by police who patrol large swaths of rural land." Alberta recently announced $10 million in extra funds to "deal with rural crime," as police have "said rural crime jumped 41 per cent between 2013 and 2017." The new funds are "earmarked to hire more police officers, more Crown prosecutors and to add organized crime specialists to investigative teams."

The prosecutors' announcement "came nearly a week after Cruz was indicted by a grand jury on 34 counts of premeditated murder and attempted murder for the Feb. 14 massacre, which killed 17 people and injured the same number." Attorneys for Cruz "do not contest his guilt, and they have offered to have him plead guilty if prosecutors did not seek the death penalty and instead agreed to a life sentence in prison."

The Monitor says the trend has "accelerated over the past decade, thanks to increased awareness of past cultural injustices and renewed respect for national sovereignty, some experts say." Since 2007, the US has "returned more than 8,000 stolen artifacts to 30 countries, including paintings from Poland, manuscripts from Peru, and dinosaur fossils from Mongolia, according to US Immigration and Customs Enforcement."

Technology

US Homeland Security Using Facial Recognition Tech To Rescue Child Exploitation Victims.

FedScoop Share to Facebook Share to Twitter (3/13, Chappellet) reports the US Department of Homeland Security's Science and Technology Directorate is "developing and testing facial recognition algorithms to help scour through images of child exploitation found on the internet and the dark web." The project, called Child Exploitation Image Analytics (CHEXIA), "aims to aid investigators in dealing with the huge amounts of graphic and violent images of child abuse that they collect." Automatic facial recognition technology "can help these investigators locate both the victims and the perpetrators more quickly, officials say." Program Manager Patricia Wolfhope explained that the "number of reports received through the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) cyber tip line has grown steadily each year, from 223,374 to 326,310 to 415,650 in 2010, 2011, and 2012, respectively," and NCMEC's "analysis indicates the number of images being collected and traded by offenders worldwide continues to expand exponentially." As a result, S&T partnered with the Child Exploitation Investigations Unit at Homeland Security Investigations' Cyber Crimes Center (C3) "to explore how technology can help."

Delaware To Test Digital Driver's Licenses.

"Nervous residents of Austin called police more than 265 times by Tuesday evening to report suspicious packages near their homes following a series of package explosions that left two people dead and two others seriously injured." Austin Police Chief Brian Manley "encouraged residents to call 911 if they found any packages on their doorsteps that they weren't expecting or did not include normal markings." USA Today says a "multi-agency investigation to find the serial bomber" has developed. The FBI "dispatched behavioral profilers, evidence collection teams and bomb technicians." The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives "sent 30 specialists, including analysts and explosives specialists." USA Today explains that the investigation "has grown to over 100 law enforcement officials." KTBC-TV

But it was not clear how they might be tied to a third household where a package bomb also exploded." Chief Manley is quoted as saying, "We're not saying that we believe terrorism or hate is in play, but we absolutely have to consider that because we don't want to limit what we are investigating, what we are considering and how we are approaching this case."

Bombs Historically Produce "Wealth" Of Evidence. The Austin (TX) American Statesman <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7979436-6c14&l=010-977&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7979436-6c14&l=011-c3a&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7979436-6c14&l=012-4fc&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Lindell) reports "bombings produce a wealth of physical evidence," which is "part of the reason that cases resulting in death or injury have almost always, in recent years, led to a suspect being arrested. The recovered material is checked against the ATF's Arson and Explosives National Repository and the FBI's Terrorist Explosive Device Analytical Center." The Statesman adds that "explosives experts not working on the case described a fast-moving but detail-oriented approach" to solving such cases.

San Diego Police Create New Homelessness Division.

Capt. Scott Wahl, who will run the unit, "said the division will focus on neighborhood quality-of-life issues including graffiti, crime and homelessness." He added, "It's about being proactive on crime-prevention techniques and strategies. ... We're going to have teams that will be proactive in addressing community concerns and issues."

The Justice Department, Trump said it "was reviewing the issue and would soon move to take the devices off shelves. But at the time, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives...had reached no such conclusion." The Justice Department and ATF have since "aligned themselves with the president," and "announc[ed] on Saturday that the agency can ban bump stocks under current law."

Illinois Governor Vetoes Measure Requiring State To License Gun Dealers. Bruce Rauner on Tuesday "vetoed a bill that would have required the state to license and regulate gun shops, drawing sharp criticism from Democrats." Rauner "called the proposal 'duplicative' because the federal government already licenses firearms retailers. He said adding another layer of oversight would be costly for businesses and 'do little to improve public safety.'"

Appeals Court Overturns Injunction Blocking Texas Anti-Sanctuary Law.

Politico says the ruling "was not a surprise, because that court issued a stay last September allowing the bulk of the Texas law...to take effect."

The Dallas Morning News <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7979436-6c14&l=022-0bc&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7979436-6c14&l=023-fb2&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031401iacp&r=7979436-6c14&l=024-517&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/13, Barragán) reports that "with the exception of a statute that would punish local officials for endorsing policies that limit federal immigration enforcement," the court "allowed the rest of the law to stand." The court "blocked that section of the law because it deemed the word 'endorse' to be too broad and risked subjecting local officials to punishment for speaking out against the law, a violation of the First Amendment guarantee to free speech." According to the News, "officials who act on limiting federal immigration enforcement, however, are still subject to punishment. 'With one exception, SB 4's provisions do not, on their face, violate the Constitution,' the court's opinion reads." Officials "can be forbidden to enact or enforce such policies, the panel ruled, but a ban on endorsements violates the First Amendment." ACLU attorney Lee Gelernt "said they were considering whether to appeal and would probably make a decision this week." Gelernt also "said his organization would also be monitoring how the law was carried out."

Volunteers "patrol their neighbourhoods and watch for crimes in progress." They also "jot down licence plates of suspicious vehicles, for example, or call 911." CBC explains that the goal of the crime-watchers is to "fill any gaps left by police who patrol large swaths of rural land." Alberta recently announced $10 million in extra funds to "deal with rural crime," as police have "said rural crime jumped 41 per cent between 2013 and 2017." The new funds are "earmarked to hire more police officers, more Crown prosecutors and to add organized crime specialists to investigative teams."

Prosecutors To Seek Death Penalty For Parkland Shooting Suspect.

The Washington Post Share to Facebook Share to Twitter (3/13, Berman) reports, "Prosecutors in Broward County, Fla., said Tuesday they would seek a death sentence for Nikolas Cruz, the 19-year-old charged with the shooting rampage at a Parkland high school last month." The prosecutors' announcement "came nearly a week after Cruz was indicted by a grand jury on 34 counts of premeditated murder and attempted murder for the Feb. 14 massacre, which killed 17 people and injured the same number." Attorneys for Cruz "do not contest his guilt, and they have offered to have him plead guilty if prosecutors did not seek the death penalty and instead agreed to a life sentence in prison."

US Homeland Security Using Facial Recognition Tech To Rescue Child Exploitation Victims.

FedScoop Share to Facebook Share to Twitter (3/13, Chappellet) reports the US Department of Homeland Security's Science and Technology Directorate is "developing and testing facial recognition algorithms to help scour through images of child exploitation found on the internet and the dark web." The project, called Child Exploitation Image Analytics (CHEXIA), "aims to aid investigators in dealing with the huge amounts of graphic and violent images of child abuse that they collect." Automatic facial recognition technology "can help these investigators locate both the victims and the perpetrators more quickly, officials say." Program Manager Patricia Wolfhope explained that the "number of reports received through the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) cyber tip line has grown steadily each year, from 223,374 to 326,310 to 415,650 in 2010, 2011, and 2012, respectively," and NCMEC's "analysis indicates the number of images being collected and traded by offenders worldwide continues to expand exponentially." As a result, S&T partnered with the Child Exploitation Investigations Unit at Homeland Security Investigations' Cyber Crimes Center (C3) "to explore how technology can help."

The State Police put out a video on its YouTube channel, where Trooper Dustin Fitch "showed drivers how to clear off their car quickly and effectively." Fitch "said the department doesn't have a statute written specifically for failure to remove snow from a vehicle before driving, but that the issue can lead to other offenses, such as impeding operation and unsecured load tickets." He added, "It's a big issue because you're not only putting yourself, the driver, in danger, but you're putting other drivers in danger. ... Whether it's the snow blinding you or blowing off and causing a whiteout to drivers behind you - it can be blinding."

Representatives on Wednesday "easily passed a bill that would incentivize schools to develop threat assessment and safety plans, taking its first concrete steps to respond to last month's school shooting in Parkland, Fla. on the one-month anniversary of the massacre." The House "voted 407-10 to pass the legislation, which was sponsored by Rep. John Rutherford, Florida Republican." The measure "allots $50 million in annual grants to local schools to help them develop threat assessment and response plans, as well as initiatives to try to flag early warning signs of students who might be a danger to themselves or others." The State Police put out a video on its YouTube channel, where Trooper Dustin Fitch "showed drivers how to clear off their car quickly and effectively." Fitch "said the department doesn't have a statute written specifically for failure to remove snow from a vehicle before driving, but that the issue can lead to other offenses, such as impeded operation and unsecured load tickets." He added, "It's a big issue because you're not only putting yourself, the driver, in danger, but you're putting other drivers in danger. ... Whether it's the snow blinding you or blowing off and causing a whiteout to drivers behind you - it can be blinding."

Massachusetts State Police Call On Drivers To Remove Snow From Vehicles.

The State Police put out a video on its YouTube channel, where Trooper Dustin Fitch "showed drivers how to clear off their car quickly and effectively." Fitch "said the department doesn't have a statute written specifically for failure to remove snow from a vehicle before driving, but that the issue can lead to other offenses, such as impeded operation and unsecured load tickets." He added, "It's a big issue because you're not only putting yourself, the driver, in danger, but you're putting other drivers in danger. ... Whether it's the snow blinding you or blowing off and causing a whiteout to drivers behind you - it can be blinding."

According to the Gazette, "t two-year investigation into the pipeline culminated with an early morning raid Tuesday and the arrests of five alleged drug bosses, police said." Officers "seized 1,075 grams of heroin, 200 grams of cocaine and 66 grams of fentanyl, police said. 'We have saved untold amounts of lives,' said Don Hibbert, the special agent in charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration in Baltimore." The Gazette adds, "federal agents, police and prosecutors announced the arrests at a news conference Wednesday," and "they pledged to disrupt the rising tide of fentanyl reaching Maryland."

Minnesota Mosque Bombers Arrested.

Under the Prince Albert program, "all drugs are eligible," whereas in Saskatoon "it is restricted to cocaine the holder believes may be mixed with fentanyl." Under the Saskatoon program, people can turn in drugs at the front desk of the department's downtown headquarters, while Prince Albert police will respond to calls so officers can seize the drugs. The programs have come in "response to a string of overdoses in Saskatoon that has Saskatchewan's Ministry of Corrections and Policing 'very concerned,' according to ministry spokesperson Drew Wilby." On Saturday, Saskatoon police "responded to a total of six calls from three different locations around the city about people suffering from overdoses."

The State Police put out a video on its YouTube channel, where Trooper Dustin Fitch "showed drivers how to clear off their car quickly and effectively." Fitch "said the department doesn't have a statute written specifically for failure to remove snow from a vehicle before driving, but that the issue can lead to other offenses, such as impeded operation and unsecured load tickets." He added, "It's a big issue because you're not only putting yourself, the driver, in danger, but you're putting other drivers in danger. ... Whether it's the snow blinding you or blowing off and causing a whiteout to drivers behind you - it can be blinding."

Massachusetts State Police Call On Drivers To Remove Snow From Vehicles.

The Boston Globe <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=8539988-dd12&l=013-50b&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=8539988-dd12&l=014-048&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=8539988-dd12&l=015-075&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/14) reports, "After a nor'easter struck Massachusetts, leaving up to 2 feet of snow, some drivers were hitting the roads without clearing off their cars first, much to the dismay of State Police." The State Police put out a video on its YouTube channel, where Trooper Dustin Fitch "showed drivers how to clear off their car quickly and effectively." Fitch "said the department doesn't have a statute written specifically for failure to remove snow from a vehicle before driving, but that the issue can lead to other offenses, such as impeded operation and unsecured load tickets." He added, "It's a big issue because you're not only putting yourself, the driver, in danger, but you're putting other drivers in danger. ... Whether it's the snow blinding you or blowing off and causing a whiteout to drivers behind you - it can be blinding."

Authorities Bust New York-To-Maryland Heroin Pipeline.

The Baltimore Sun <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=8539988-dd12&l=01c-5db&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=8539988-dd12&l=01d-f72&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=8539988-dd12&l=01e-dac&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/14, Prudente) reports that "police have arrested 19 people who they say funneled heroin and fentanyl from the Bronx to South Baltimore." According to the Gazette, "t two-year investigation into the pipeline culminated with an early morning raid Tuesday and the arrests of five alleged drug bosses, police said." Officers "seized 1,075 grams of heroin, 200 grams of cocaine and 66 grams of fentanyl, police said. 'We have saved untold amounts of lives,' said Don Hibbert, the special agent in charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration in Baltimore." The Gazette adds, "federal agents, police and prosecutors announced the arrests at a news conference Wednesday," and "they pledged to disrupt the rising tide of fentanyl reaching Maryland."

Minnesota Mosque Bombers Arrested.

Under the Prince Albert program, "all drugs are eligible," whereas in Saskatoon "it is restricted to cocaine the holder believes may be mixed with fentanyl." Under the Saskatoon program, people can turn in drugs at the front desk of the department's downtown headquarters, while Prince Albert police will respond to calls so officers can seize the drugs. The programs have come in "response to a string of overdoses in Saskatoon that has Saskatchewan's Ministry of Corrections and Policing 'very concerned,' according to ministry spokesperson Drew Wilby." On Saturday, Saskatoon police "responded to a total of six calls from three different locations around the city about people suffering from overdoses."

The State Police put out a video on its YouTube channel, where Trooper Dustin Fitch "showed drivers how to clear off their car quickly and effectively." Fitch "said the department doesn't have a statute written specifically for failure to remove snow from a vehicle before driving, but that the issue can lead to other offenses, such as impeding operation and unsecured load tickets." He added, "It's a big issue because you're not only putting yourself, the driver, in danger, but you're putting other drivers in danger. ... Whether it's the snow blinding you or blowing off and causing a whiteout to drivers behind you - it can be blinding."

Massachusetts State Police Call On Drivers To Remove Snow From Vehicles.

The Boston Globe <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7972275-f95d&l=013-50b&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7972275-f95d&l=014-048&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7972275-f95d&l=015-075&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/14) reports, "After a nor'easter struck Massachusetts, leaving up to 2 feet of snow, some drivers were hitting the roads without clearing off their cars first, much to the dismay of State Police." The State Police put out a video on its YouTube channel, where Trooper Dustin Fitch "showed drivers how to clear off their car quickly and effectively." Fitch "said the department doesn't have a statute written specifically for failure to remove snow from a vehicle before driving, but that the issue can lead to other offenses, such as impeded operation and unsecured load tickets." He added, "It's a big issue because you're not only putting yourself, the driver, in danger, but you're putting other drivers in danger. ... Whether it's the snow blinding you or blowing off and causing a whiteout to drivers behind you - it can be blinding."

Massachusetts State Police Call On Drivers To Remove Snow From Vehicles.

The Boston Globe <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=013-50b&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=014-048&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=015-075&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/14) reports, "After a nor'easter struck Massachusetts, leaving up to 2 feet of snow, some drivers were hitting the roads without clearing off their cars first, much to the dismay of State Police." The State Police put out a video on its YouTube channel, where Trooper Dustin Fitch "showed drivers how to clear off their car quickly and effectively." Fitch "said the department doesn't have a statute written specifically for failure to remove snow from a vehicle before driving, but that the issue can lead to other offenses, such as impeded operation and unsecured load tickets." He added, "It's a big issue because you're not only putting yourself, the driver, in danger, but you're putting other drivers in danger. ... Whether it's the snow blinding you or blowing off and causing a whiteout to drivers behind you - it can be blinding."

Crime & Drugs

Authorities Bust New York-To-Maryland Heroin Pipeline.

The Baltimore Sun <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=01c-5db&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=01d-f72&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=01e-dac&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/14, Prudente) reports that "police have arrested 19 people who they say funneled heroin and fentanyl from the Bronx to South Baltimore." According to the Gazette, "t two-year investigation into the pipeline culminated with an early morning raid Tuesday and the arrests of five alleged drug bosses, police said." Officers "seized 1,075 grams of heroin, 200 grams of cocaine and 66 grams of fentanyl, police said. 'We have saved untold amounts of lives,' said Don Hibbert, the special agent in charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration in Baltimore." The Gazette adds, "federal agents, police and prosecutors announced the arrests at a news conference Wednesday," and "they pledged to disrupt the rising tide of fentanyl reaching Maryland."

Minnesota Mosque Bombers Arrested.

The Washington Post <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=01f-32c&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=020-4c7&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=021-79e&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/14, Phillips) reports that "three men from rural Illinois were arrested and charged Tuesday after one of them said that they were responsible for bombing the Dar Al-Farooq Islamic Center in a Minneapolis suburb last summer" as part of "an attempt to drive Muslims out of the United States, according to a federal complaint." Michael McWhorter told federal agents they sought "to 'scare' Muslims 'out of the country' and to 'show them hey, you're not welcome here, get the f- out,'" according to the complaint filed Tuesday." The three men are charged with arson, as well as a separate firearm charge for illegally possessing a machine gun, along with a fourth man who is not charged with the bombing.

Prince Albert Police To Offer Drug Amnesty.

CBC (CAN) <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=022-698&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=023-6c6&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7968590-7562&l=024-aef&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/14) reports the Prince Albert Police Service "says it will join Saskatoon's police force in asking people to surrender drugs without incurring legal consequences." Under the Prince Albert program, "all drugs are eligible," whereas in Saskatoon "it is restricted to cocaine the holder believes may be mixed with fentanyl." Under the Saskatoon program, people can turn in drugs at the front desk of the department's downtown headquarters, while Prince Albert police will respond to calls so officers can seize the drugs. The programs have come in "response to a string of overdoses in Saskatoon that has Saskatchewan's Ministry of Corrections and Policing 'very concerned,' according to ministry spokesperson Drew Wilby." On Saturday, Saskatoon police "responded to a total of six calls from three different locations around the city about people suffering from overdoses."

The State Police put out a video on its YouTube channel, where Trooper Dustin Fitch "showed drivers how to clear off their car quickly and effectively." Fitch "said the department doesn't have a statute written specifically for failure to remove snow from a vehicle before driving, but that the issue can lead to other offenses, such as impeding operation and unsecured load tickets." He added, "It's a big issue because you're not only putting yourself, the driver, in danger, but you're putting other drivers in danger. ... Whether it's the snow blinding you or blowing off and causing a whiteout to drivers behind you - it can be blinding."

Massachusetts State Police Call On Drivers To Remove Snow From Vehicles.

The Boston Globe <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7963908-5124&l=013-50b&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7963908-5124&l=014-048&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7963908-5124&l=015-075&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/14) reports, "After a nor'easter struck Massachusetts, leaving up to 2 feet of snow, some drivers were hitting the roads without clearing off their cars first, much to the dismay of State Police." The State Police put out a video on its YouTube channel, where Trooper Dustin Fitch "showed drivers how to clear off their car quickly and effectively." Fitch "said the department doesn't have a statute written specifically for failure to remove snow from a vehicle before driving, but that the issue can lead to other offenses, such as impeded operation and unsecured load tickets." He added, "It's a big issue because you're not only putting yourself, the driver, in danger, but you're putting other drivers in danger. ... Whether it's the snow blinding you or blowing off and causing a whiteout to drivers behind you - it can be blinding."

Authorities Bust New York-To-Maryland Heroin Pipeline.

The Baltimore Sun <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7963908-5124&l=01c-5db&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7963908-5124&l=01d-f72&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018031501iacp&r=7963908-5124&l=01e-dac&t=c> Share to Twitter (3/14, Prudente) reports that "police have arrested 19 people who they say funneled heroin and fentanyl from the Bronx to South Baltimore." According to the Gazette, "t two-year investigation into the pipeline culminated with an early morning raid Tuesday and the arrests of five alleged drug bosses, police said." Officers "seized 1,075 grams of heroin, 200 grams of cocaine and 66 grams of fentanyl, police said. 'We have saved untold amounts of lives,' said Don Hibbert, the special agent in charge of the Drug Enforcement Administration in Baltimore." The Gazette adds, "federal agents, police and prosecutors announced the arrests at a news conference Wednesday," and "they pledged to disrupt the rising tide of fentanyl reaching Maryland."

Minnesota Mosque Bombers Arrested.

Under the Prince Albert program, "all drugs are eligible," whereas in Saskatoon "it is restricted to cocaine the holder believes may be mixed with fentanyl." Under the Saskatoon program, people can turn in drugs at the front desk of the department's downtown headquarters, while Prince Albert police will respond to calls so officers can seize the drugs. The programs have come in "response to a string of overdoses in Saskatoon that has Saskatchewan's Ministry of Corrections and Policing 'very concerned,' according to ministry spokesperson Drew Wilby." On Saturday, Saskatoon police "responded to a total of six calls from three different locations around the city about people suffering from overdoses."

In the past year, facial recognition use by public safety has seen significant improvements in matching accuracy. Although the confidence level in the technology is rising, there are still many best practices they are missing out on such as human involvement, a critical deciding factor of whether returned leads are viable or not. In this webinar, see how Director of Client Relations for Vigilant Solutions and Retired NYPD Detective, Roger Rodriguez uses Vigilant's FaceSearch to generate investigative leads from images that normally do not meet the criteria for facial recognition searching after vetting and performing specific enhancements.

Register for our webinar: Man v. Machine, and we will explain why the facial recognition process still needs human involvement.

In the past year, facial recognition use by public safety has seen significant improvements in matching accuracy. Although the confidence level in the technology is rising, there are still many best practices they are missing out on such as human involvement, a critical deciding factor of whether returned leads are viable or not. In this webinar, see how Director of Client Relations for Vigilant Solutions and Retired NYPD Detective, Roger Rodriguez uses Vigilant's FaceSearch to generate investigative leads from images that normally do not meet the criteria for facial recognition searching after vetting and performing specific enhancements.

Register for our webinar: Man v. Machine, and we will explain why the facial recognition process still needs human involvement.

In the past year, facial recognition use by public safety has seen significant improvements in matching accuracy. Although the confidence level in the technology is rising, there are still many best practices they are missing out on such as human involvement, a critical deciding factor of whether returned leads are viable or not. In this webinar, see how Director of Client Relations for Vigilant Solutions and Retired NYPD Detective, Roger Rodriguez uses Vigilant's FaceSearch to generate investigative leads from images that normally do not meet the criteria for facial recognition searching after vetting and performing specific enhancements.

Register for our webinar: Man v. Machine, and we will explain why the facial recognition process still needs human involvement.

US Agencies Launch Crackdown On Sexual Harassment In Housing.

Reuters <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=004-212&t=c>> <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=005-df1&t=c>> Share to Facebook <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=006-alb&t=c>> Share to Twitter (4/12, Lynch) reports US President Donald Trump's Administration "launched an initiative on Thursday to crack down on sexual harassment of women by landlords and encourage victims to come forward for help from the U.S. Justice Department and Department of Housing and Urban Development." The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

The Washington Times <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=007-aff&t=c>> <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=008-288&t=c>> Share to Facebook <<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=009-50c&t=c>> Share to Twitter (4/12, Mordock) reports that "joined by HUD Secretary Ben Carson," Sessions "said the goal of the task force is to make it easier for sexual-assault victims to alert law enforcement." The task force "will enable DOJ to share complaints with officials at HUD and improve training for public housing authorities," and "it will focus on sharing data and analysis, evolution compliant systems in public housing, review federal policies and coordination of public outreach."

AP Analysis: Red Flag Laws May Help Prevent Suicides.

The AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=00a-2f0&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=00b-ac0&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=00c-f40&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Yin) reports, "Interest in red flag laws has surged since a February school shooting in Parkland, Florida, left 17 people dead." The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

Boston Officials Outline Public Safety Plans For Marathon.

The Boston Globe <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=00d-230&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=00e-f5b&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=00f-084&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12) reports Boston City officials on Thursday outlined public safety plans for the Boston Marathon. Officials urged attendees to "dress for rain, keep the drones in storage, and help keep lines at security checkpoints short by leaving backpacks and coolers at home." Boston Police Commissioner William B. Evans "said law enforcement has no information indicating that there is an active threat against Monday's race." Law enforcement officials "said there will be both a high visibility police presence - including police on rooftops - as well as undercover officers along the race route, and security checkpoints will be installed with metal detectors."

State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

In Bandung, West Java, "141 people have been admitted to hospital with symptoms of alcohol poisoning, authorities said." Police have "promised to stamp out the scourge before the Islamic holy month of Ramadan beginning mid-May, with a new task force being created to handle the assignment." In response to recent poisonings, police have "rounded up sellers of bootleg alcohol in affected areas, and sent samples of seized liquor to the country's Drug and Food Control Agency for forensic evaluation, according to the state-run Antara news agency." Preliminary results "suggested sellers were adding cough medicine and anti-mosquito lotion to the alcohol."

The Post calls it "the first time a suspect sought by the Drug Enforcement Administration has been included among the FBI's top targets." Caro Quintero "is a notorious and uniquely reviled figure at the DEA, blamed for the kidnapping and murder of Enrique 'Kiki' Camarena, a DEA agent who was fatally tortured in 1985 while investigating the now-defunct Guadalajara Cartel." Caro Quintero was sentenced to 40 years for murder soon after that, "but a Mexican judge ordered his release in 2013 and he has since disappeared, evading efforts by U.S. and

Mexican authorities to recapture him.”

FBI Recovers Chagall Painting Stolen In 1988.

Under the headline, "Marc Chagall Painting Stolen From New York Apartment Recovered By FBI After 30 Years," the Washington Post <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=043-bb1&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=044-7f0&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=045-0d4&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Hsu) reports that a Marc Chagall painting stolen from a New York City apartment in 1988 "has been recovered by the FBI and is expected to fetch several hundred thousand dollars at auction three decades after it went missing." The Post says "the theft was 'an inside job' by a temporary employee who had access to the apartment building in Manhattan's stately Sutton Place neighborhood when the owners were on vacation, FBI art crimes unit and Washington Field Office Special Agent Marc Hess said." According to the Post, "A Maryland associate of the thief who acquired the work after a dispute tried to sell it last year," but "a Washington art gallery owner balked...because the piece lacked documents proving ownership and referred the would-be seller to the FBI."

<<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7963908-26e5&l=006-alb&t=c>> (4/12, Lynch) reports US President Donald

Trump's Administration "launched an initiative on Thursday to crack down on sexual harassment of women by landlords and encourage victims to come forward for help from the U.S. Justice Department and Department of Housing and Urban Development." The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

Officials urged attendees to "dress for rain, keep the drones in storage, and help keep lines at security checkpoints short by leaving backpacks and coolers at home." Boston Police Commissioner William B. Evans "said law enforcement has no information indicating that there is an active threat against Monday's race." Law enforcement officials "said there will be both a high visibility police presence - including police on rooftops - as well as undercover officers along the race route, and security checkpoints will be installed with metal detectors."

State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

The task force "will enable DOJ to share complaints with officials at HUD and improve training for public housing authorities," and "it will focus on sharing data and analysis, evolution compliant systems in public housing, review federal policies and coordination of public outreach."

AP Analysis: Red Flag Laws May Help Prevent Suicides.

The AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7979436-782e&l=00a-2f0&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7979436-782e&l=00b-ac0&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7979436-782e&l=00c-f40&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Yin) reports, "Interest in red flag laws has surged since a February school shooting in Parkland, Florida, left 17 people dead." The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

Boston Officials Outline Public Safety Plans For Marathon.

Officials urged attendees to "dress for rain, keep the drones in storage, and help keep lines at security checkpoints short by leaving backpacks and coolers at home." Boston Police Commissioner William B. Evans "said law enforcement has no information indicating that there is an active threat against Monday's race." Law enforcement officials "said there will be both a high visibility police presence - including police on rooftops - as well as undercover officers along the race route, and security checkpoints will be installed with metal detectors."

Orange County EMS associate program director Dr. Christopher Hunter said, "Basically the goal of these drills is to really stress our system. We have a really well-organized emergency response system in Central Florida, and the whole goal is to overwhelm those resources - and it takes a lot to overwhelm those resources." The Sentinel says 14 hospitals "collaborated on Thursday's drill, along with Lake, Orange and Seminole counties; the City of Orlando; the Central Florida Disaster Medical Coalition; Orange County Public Schools; the FBI; the Florida Department of Law Enforcement; and the Orange County Examiner's Office."

New York Police To Crack Down On Distracted Driving.

Newsday (NY) <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7979436-782e&l=019-d97&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7979436-782e&l=01a-437&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7979436-782e&l=01b-387&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12) reports a statewide crackdown on distracted driving in New York, that includes texting while driving, "begins Thursday and continues through Monday, State Police said." State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

Indonesian Police To Crack Down On Bootleg Alcohol After 80 Die.

In Bandung, West Java, "141 people have been admitted to hospital with symptoms of alcohol poisoning, authorities said." Police have "promised to stamp out the scourge before the Islamic holy month of Ramadan beginning mid-May, with a new task force being created to handle the assignment." In response to recent poisonings, police have "rounded up sellers of bootleg alcohol in affected areas, and sent samples of seized liquor to the country's Drug and Food Control Agency for forensic evaluation, according to the state-run Antara news agency." Preliminary results "suggested sellers were adding cough medicine and anti-mosquito lotion to the alcohol."

Arizona State University Police Issue Warning About Human Traffickers.

The Post calls it "the first time a suspect sought by the Drug Enforcement Administration has been included among the FBI's top targets." Caro Quintero "is a notorious and uniquely reviled figure at the DEA, blamed for the kidnapping and murder of Enrique 'Kiki' Camarena, a DEA agent who was fatally tortured in 1985 while investigating the now-defunct Guadalajara Cartel." Caro Quintero was sentenced to 40 years for murder soon after that, "but a Mexican judge ordered his release in 2013 and he has since disappeared, evading efforts by U.S. and

Mexican authorities to recapture him.”

FBI Recovers Chagall Painting Stolen In 1988.

Under the headline, "Marc Chagall Painting Stolen From New York Apartment Recovered By FBI After 30 Years," the Washington Post <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7979436-782e&l=043-bb1&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7979436-782e&l=044-7f0&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7979436-782e&l=045-0d4&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Hsu) reports that a Marc Chagall painting stolen from a New York City apartment in 1988 "has been recovered by the FBI and is expected to fetch several hundred thousand dollars at auction three decades after it went missing." The Post says "the theft was 'an inside job' by a temporary employee who had access to the apartment building in Manhattan's stately Sutton Place neighborhood when the owners were on vacation, FBI art crimes unit and Washington Field Office Special Agent Marc Hess said." According to the Post, "A Maryland associate of the thief who acquired the work after a dispute tried to sell it last year," but "a Washington art gallery owner balked...because the piece lacked documents proving ownership and referred the would-be seller to the FBI."

Trump's Administration "launched an initiative on Thursday to crack down on sexual harassment of women by landlords and encourage victims to come forward for help from the U.S. Justice Department and Department of Housing and Urban Development." The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

Officials urged attendees to "dress for rain, keep the drones in storage, and help keep lines at security checkpoints short by leaving backpacks and coolers at home." Boston Police Commissioner William B. Evans "said law enforcement has no information indicating that there is an active threat against Monday's race." Law enforcement officials "said there will be both a high visibility police presence - including police on rooftops - as well as undercover officers along the race route, and security checkpoints will be installed with metal detectors."

State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

In Bandung, West Java, "141 people have been admitted to hospital with symptoms of alcohol poisoning, authorities said." Police have "promised to stamp out the scourge before the Islamic holy month of Ramadan beginning mid-May, with a new task force being created to handle the assignment." In response to recent poisonings, police have "rounded up sellers of bootleg alcohol in affected areas, and sent samples of seized liquor to the country's Drug and Food Control Agency for forensic evaluation, according to the state-run Antara news agency." Preliminary results "suggested sellers were adding cough medicine and anti-mosquito lotion to the alcohol."

In the wake of 58 people being killed at a Las Vegas music festival, "Indio police and 14 other local and federal agencies will have more eyes than ever on the crowd thanks to the undermanned aerial surveillance." Indio Police Sgt. Dan Marshall is quoted as saying, "Drones will be flying over watching the perimeters. It takes us a few minutes to get an officer to a perimeter breach but a drone takes 45 seconds. ... The drones will also allow us to monitor traffic better than before."

The Post says "the theft was 'an inside job' by a temporary employee who had access to the apartment building in Manhattan's stately Sutton Place neighborhood when the owners were on vacation, FBI art crimes unit and Washington Field Office Special Agent Marc Hess said." According to the Post, "A Maryland associate of the thief who acquired the work after a dispute tried to sell it last year," but "a Washington art gallery owner balked...because the piece lacked documents proving ownership and referred the would-be seller to the FBI."

(4/12, Lynch) reports US President Donald Trump's Administration "launched an initiative on Thursday to crack down on sexual harassment of women by landlords and encourage victims to come forward for help from the U.S. Justice Department and Department of Housing and Urban Development." The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

(4/12, Mordock) reports that "joined by HUD Secretary Ben Carson," Sessions "said the goal of the task force is to make it easier for sexual-assault victims to alert law enforcement." The task force "will enable DOJ to share complaints with officials at HUD and improve training for public housing authorities," and "it will focus on sharing data and analysis, evolution compliant systems in public housing, review federal policies and coordination of public outreach."

The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

Officials urged attendees to "dress for rain, keep the drones in storage, and help keep lines at security checkpoints short by leaving backpacks and coolers at home." Boston Police Commissioner William B. Evans "said law enforcement has no information indicating that there is an active threat against Monday's race." Law enforcement officials "said there will be both a high visibility police presence - including police on rooftops - as well as undercover officers along the race route, and security checkpoints will be installed with metal detectors."

State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

In Bandung, West Java, "141 people have been admitted to hospital with symptoms of alcohol poisoning, authorities said." Police have "promised to stamp out the scourge before the Islamic holy month of Ramadan beginning mid-May, with a new task force being created to handle the assignment." In response to recent poisonings, police have "rounded up sellers of bootleg alcohol in affected areas, and sent samples of seized liquor to the country's Drug and Food Control Agency for forensic evaluation, according to the state-run Antara news agency." Preliminary results "suggested sellers were adding cough medicine and anti-mosquito lotion to the alcohol."

government is "pushing ahead with controversial legislation it says will create 'back doors' into encrypted communication services - but still can't say when it will introduce the bill." A spokesperson for the acting Attorney General said the legislation is in the "advanced stages of development." In July 2017, Australian federal police deputy commissioner Mike Phelan "said 'the vast majority' of investigations now involved some sort of encryption, but the 'legislation has not yet kept pace with technology.'"

In the wake of 58 people being killed at a Las Vegas music festival, "Indio police and 14 other local and federal agencies will have more eyes than ever on the crowd thanks to the unmanned aerial surveillance." Indio Police Sgt. Dan Marshall is quoted as saying, "Drones will be flying over watching the perimeters. It takes us a few minutes to get an officer to a perimeter breach but a drone takes 45 seconds. ... The drones will also allow us to monitor traffic better than before."

The Post says "the theft was 'an inside job' by a temporary employee who had access to the apartment building in Manhattan's stately Sutton Place neighborhood when the owners were on vacation, FBI art crimes unit and Washington Field Office Special Agent Marc Hess said." According to the Post, "A Maryland associate of the thief who acquired the work after a dispute tried to sell it last year," but "a Washington art gallery owner balked...because the piece lacked documents proving ownership and referred the would-be seller to the FBI."

The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

The task force "will enable DOJ to share complaints with officials at HUD and improve training for public housing authorities," and "it will focus on sharing data and analysis, evolution compliant systems in public housing, review federal policies and coordination of public outreach."

AP Analysis: Red Flag Laws May Help Prevent Suicides.

The AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=8737284-b3eb&l=00a-2f0&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=8737284-b3eb&l=00b-ac0&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=8737284-b3eb&l=00c-f40&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Yin) reports, "Interest in red flag laws has surged since a February school shooting in Parkland, Florida, left 17 people dead." The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

Boston Officials Outline Public Safety Plans For Marathon.

Officials urged attendees to "dress for rain, keep the drones in storage, and help keep lines at security checkpoints short by leaving backpacks and coolers at home." Boston Police Commissioner William B. Evans "said law enforcement has no information indicating that there is an active threat against Monday's race." Law enforcement officials "said there will be both a high visibility police presence - including police on rooftops - as well as undercover officers along the race route, and security checkpoints will be installed with metal detectors."

Orange County EMS associate program director Dr. Christopher Hunter said, "Basically the goal of these drills is to really stress our system. We have a really well-organized emergency response system in Central Florida, and the whole goal is to overwhelm those resources - and it takes a lot to overwhelm those resources." The Sentinel says 14 hospitals "collaborated on Thursday's drill, along with Lake, Orange and Seminole counties; the City of Orlando; the Central Florida Disaster Medical Coalition; Orange County Public Schools; the FBI; the Florida Department of Law Enforcement; and the Orange County Examiner's Office."

New York Police To Crack Down On Distracted Driving.

State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

Indonesian Police To Crack Down On Bootleg Alcohol After 80 Die.

In Bandung, West Java, "141 people have been admitted to hospital with symptoms of alcohol poisoning, authorities said." Police have "promised to stamp out the scourge before the Islamic holy month of Ramadan beginning mid-May, with a new task force being created to handle the assignment." In response to recent poisonings, police have "rounded up sellers of bootleg alcohol in affected areas, and sent samples of seized liquor to the country's Drug and Food Control Agency for forensic evaluation, according to the state-run Antara news agency." Preliminary results "suggested sellers were adding cough medicine and anti-mosquito lotion to the alcohol."

Arizona State University Police Issue Warning About Human Traffickers.

The Post calls it "the first time a suspect sought by the Drug Enforcement Administration has been included among the FBI's top targets." Caro Quintero "is a notorious and uniquely reviled figure at the DEA, blamed for the kidnapping and murder of Enrique 'Kiki' Camarena, a DEA agent who was fatally tortured in 1985 while investigating the now-defunct Guadalajara Cartel." Caro Quintero was sentenced to 40 years for murder soon after that, "but a Mexican judge ordered his release in 2013 and he has since disappeared, evading efforts by U.S. and

Mexican authorities to recapture him.”

FBI Recovers Chagall Painting Stolen In 1988.

Under the headline, "Marc Chagall Painting Stolen From New York Apartment Recovered By FBI After 30 Years," the Washington Post <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=8737284-b3eb&l=043-bb1&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=8737284-b3eb&l=044-7f0&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=8737284-b3eb&l=045-0d4&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Hsu) reports that a Marc Chagall painting stolen from a New York City apartment in 1988 "has been recovered by the FBI and is expected to fetch several hundred thousand dollars at auction three decades after it went missing." The Post says "the theft was 'an inside job' by a temporary employee who had access to the apartment building in Manhattan's stately Sutton Place neighborhood when the owners were on vacation, FBI art crimes unit and Washington Field Office Special Agent Marc Hess said." According to the Post, "A Maryland associate of the thief who acquired the work after a dispute tried to sell it last year," but "a Washington art gallery owner balked...because the piece lacked documents proving ownership and referred the would-be seller to the FBI."

Trump's Administration "launched an initiative on Thursday to crack down on sexual harassment of women by landlords and encourage victims to come forward for help from the U.S. Justice Department and Department of Housing and Urban Development." The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

<<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=8539988-a900&l=021-38e&t=c>> (4/12) reports Arizona State University police are "warning students that human traffickers may be attending college parties in an effort to 'recruit or coerce' women into prostitution." The department issued a safety bulletin on Thursday after it was advised on the trend by other law enforcement agencies. The bulletin said recruitment methods "include photographing or getting students into compromising situation[s]," which allows the traffickers to "use threats of force or exposure to the campus community to persuade victims into prostitution."

The Post calls it "the first time a suspect sought by the Drug Enforcement Administration has been included among the FBI's top targets." Caro Quintero "is a notorious and uniquely reviled figure at the DEA, blamed for the kidnapping and murder of Enrique 'Kiki' Camarena, a DEA agent who was fatally tortured in 1985 while investigating the now-defunct Guadalajara Cartel." Caro Quintero was sentenced to 40 years for murder soon after that, "but a Mexican judge ordered his release in 2013 and he has since disappeared, evading efforts by U.S. and Mexican authorities to recapture him."

The Post says "the theft was 'an inside job' by a temporary employee who had access to the apartment building in Manhattan's stately Sutton Place neighborhood when the owners were on vacation, FBI art crimes unit and Washington Field Office Special Agent Marc Hess said." According to the Post, "A Maryland associate of the thief who acquired the work after a dispute tried to sell it last year," but "a Washington art gallery owner balked...because the piece lacked documents proving ownership and referred the would-be seller to the FBI."

The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

Officials urged attendees to "dress for rain, keep the drones in storage, and help keep lines at security checkpoints short by leaving backpacks and coolers at home." Boston Police Commissioner William B. Evans "said law enforcement has no information indicating that there is an active threat against Monday's race." Law enforcement officials "said there will be both a high visibility police presence - including police on rooftops - as well as undercover officers along the race route, and security checkpoints will be installed with metal detectors."

Orange County EMS associate program director Dr. Christopher Hunter said, "Basically the goal of these drills is to really stress our system. We have a really well-organized emergency response system in Central Florida, and the whole goal is to overwhelm those resources - and it takes a lot to overwhelm those resources." The Sentinel says 14 hospitals "collaborated on Thursday's drill, along with Lake, Orange and Seminole counties; the City of Orlando; the Central Florida Disaster Medical Coalition; Orange County Public Schools; the FBI; the Florida Department of Law Enforcement; and the Orange County Medical Examiner's Office."

New York Police To Crack Down On Distracted Driving.

State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

Indonesian Police To Crack Down On Bootleg Alcohol After 80 Die.

In Bandung, West Java, "141 people have been admitted to hospital with symptoms of alcohol poisoning, authorities said." Police have "promised to stamp out the scourge before the Islamic holy month of Ramadan beginning mid-May, with a new task force being created to handle the assignment." In response to recent poisonings, police have "rounded up sellers of bootleg alcohol in affected areas, and sent samples of seized liquor to the country's Drug and Food Control Agency for forensic evaluation, according to the state-run Antara news agency." Preliminary results "suggested sellers were adding cough medicine and anti-mosquito lotion to the alcohol."

Arizona State University Police Issue Warning About Human Traffickers.

The Post calls it "the first time a suspect sought by the Drug Enforcement Administration has been included among the FBI's top targets." Caro Quintero "is a notorious and uniquely reviled figure at the DEA, blamed for the kidnapping and murder of Enrique 'Kiki' Camarena, a DEA agent who was fatally tortured in 1985 while investigating the now-defunct Guadalajara Cartel." Caro Quintero was sentenced to 40 years for murder soon after that, "but a Mexican judge ordered his release in 2013 and he has since disappeared, evading efforts by U.S. and

Mexican authorities to recapture him.”

FBI Recovers Chagall Painting Stolen In 1988.

Under the headline, "Marc Chagall Painting Stolen From New York Apartment Recovered By FBI After 30 Years," the Washington Post <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=8539988-a900&l=043-bb1&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=8539988-a900&l=044-7f0&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=8539988-a900&l=045-0d4&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Hsu) reports that a Marc Chagall painting stolen from a New York City apartment in 1988 "has been recovered by the FBI and is expected to fetch several hundred thousand dollars at auction three decades after it went missing." The Post says "the theft was 'an inside job' by a temporary employee who had access to the apartment building in Manhattan's stately Sutton Place neighborhood when the owners were on vacation, FBI art crimes unit and Washington Field Office Special Agent Marc Hess said." According to the Post, "A Maryland associate of the thief who acquired the work after a dispute tried to sell it last year," but "a Washington art gallery owner balked...because the piece lacked documents proving ownership and referred the would-be seller to the FBI."

<<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7968590-e7a3&l=006-alb&t=c>> (4/12, Lynch) reports US President Donald

Trump's Administration "launched an initiative on Thursday to crack down on sexual harassment of women by landlords and encourage victims to come forward for help from the U.S. Justice Department and Department of Housing and Urban Development." The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

Officials urged attendees to "dress for rain, keep the drones in storage, and help keep lines at security checkpoints short by leaving backpacks and coolers at home." Boston Police Commissioner William B. Evans "said law enforcement has no information indicating that there is an active threat against Monday's race." Law enforcement officials "said there will be both a high visibility police presence - including police on rooftops - as well as undercover officers along the race route, and security checkpoints will be installed with metal detectors."

State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

Share to Twitter (4/12, Lynch) reports US President Donald Trump's Administration "launched an initiative on Thursday to crack down on sexual harassment of women by landlords and encourage victims to come forward for help from the U.S. Justice Department and Department of Housing and Urban Development." The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

Share to Twitter (4/12, Mordock) reports that "joined by HUD Secretary Ben Carson," Sessions "said the goal of the task force is to make it easier for sexual-assault victims to alert law enforcement." The task force "will enable DOJ to share complaints with officials at HUD and improve training for public housing authorities," and "it will focus on sharing data and analysis, evolution compliant systems in public housing, review federal policies and coordination of public outreach."

AP Analysis: Red Flag Laws May Help Prevent Suicides.

The AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7968590-e7a3&l=00a-2f0&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7968590-e7a3&l=00b-ac0&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7968590-e7a3&l=00c-f40&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Yin) reports, "Interest in red flag laws has surged since a February school shooting in Parkland, Florida, left 17 people dead." The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

Boston Officials Outline Public Safety Plans For Marathon.

Officials urged attendees to "dress for rain, keep the drones in storage, and help keep lines at security checkpoints short by leaving backpacks and coolers at home." Boston Police Commissioner William B. Evans "said law enforcement has no information indicating that there is an active threat against Monday's race." Law enforcement officials "said there will be both a high visibility police presence - including police on rooftops - as well as undercover officers along the race route, and security checkpoints will be installed with metal detectors."

State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

Indonesian Police To Crack Down On Bootleg Alcohol After 80 Die.

In Bandung, West Java, "141 people have been admitted to hospital with symptoms of alcohol poisoning, authorities said." Police have "promised to stamp out the scourge before the Islamic holy month of Ramadan beginning mid-May, with a new task force being created to handle the assignment." In response to recent poisonings, police have "rounded up sellers of bootleg alcohol in affected areas, and sent samples of seized liquor to the country's Drug and Food Control Agency for forensic evaluation, according to the state-run Antara news agency." Preliminary results "suggested sellers were adding cough medicine and anti-mosquito lotion to the alcohol."

The Post calls it "the first time a suspect sought by the Drug Enforcement Administration has been included among the FBI's top targets." Caro Quintero "is a notorious and uniquely reviled figure at the DEA, blamed for the kidnapping and murder of Enrique 'Kiki' Camarena, a DEA agent who was fatally tortured in 1985 while investigating the now-defunct Guadalajara Cartel." Caro Quintero was sentenced to 40 years for murder soon after that, "but a Mexican judge ordered his release in 2013 and he has since disappeared, evading efforts by U.S. and

Share to Twitter (4/12, Lynch) reports US President Donald Trump's Administration "launched an initiative on Thursday to crack down on sexual harassment of women by landlords and encourage victims to come forward for help from the U.S. Justice Department and Department of Housing and Urban Development." The two departments "will create a task force to combat sexual harassment in housing and pursue a public awareness campaign to convince victims to report abuses with the backing of the government." Attorney General Jeff Sessions is quoted as saying, "We've seen many cases, especially in public housing, where a landlord will exploit vulnerable women and threaten them with eviction unless they provide sexual favors. ... We are not going to tolerate that." The initiative "aims at protecting women from harassment by landlords, property managers, maintenance workers, security guards and representatives of rental property owners."

Share to Twitter (4/12, Mordock) reports that "joined by HUD Secretary Ben Carson," Sessions "said the goal of the task force is to make it easier for sexual-assault victims to alert law enforcement." The task force "will enable DOJ to share complaints with officials at HUD and improve training for public housing authorities," and "it will focus on sharing data and analysis, evolution compliant systems in public housing, review federal policies and coordination of public outreach."

AP Analysis: Red Flag Laws May Help Prevent Suicides.

The AP <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=00a-2f0&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=00b-ac0&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=00c-f40&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Yin) reports, "Interest in red flag laws has surged since a February school shooting in Parkland, Florida, left 17 people dead." The AP says "statistically, the gun tragedy most likely to touch Americans is suicide," as 60% of the gun deaths in the US in 2016 were as a result of suicide. The AP adds that research "suggests the nation's first red-flag law - passed by Connecticut in 1999 after a disgruntled employee killed four executives inside the state's lottery headquarters - has become an important tool to prevent suicides." A 2017 study "estimated that Connecticut's policy stopped one suicide per 10 to 20 gun seizures over 14 years."

Boston Officials Outline Public Safety Plans For Marathon.

Officials urged attendees to "dress for rain, keep the drones in storage, and help keep lines at security checkpoints short by leaving backpacks and coolers at home." Boston Police Commissioner William B. Evans "said law enforcement has no information indicating that there is an active threat against Monday's race." Law enforcement officials "said there will be both a high visibility police presence - including police on rooftops - as well as undercover officers along the race route, and security checkpoints will be installed with metal detectors."

Orange County EMS associate program director Dr. Christopher Hunter said, "Basically the goal of these drills is to really stress our system. We have a really well-organized emergency response system in Central Florida, and the whole goal is to overwhelm those resources - and it takes a lot to overwhelm those resources." The Sentinel says 14 hospitals "collaborated on Thursday's drill, along with Lake, Orange and Seminole counties; the City of Orlando; the Central Florida Disaster Medical Coalition; Orange County Public Schools; the FBI; the Florida Department of Law Enforcement; and the Orange County Examiner's Office."

New York Police To Crack Down On Distracted Driving.

Newsday (NY) <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=019-d97&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=01a-437&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=01b-387&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12) reports a statewide crackdown on distracted driving in New York, that includes texting while driving, "begins Thursday and continues through Monday, State Police said." State troopers, along with Suffolk and Nassau Police will be utilizing both marked and unmarked vehicles as part of Operation Hang Up. The initiative is "part of National Distracted Driving Awareness Month." Since the effort began in 2011, police "said they had noticed a decline in the number of summonses for cellphone use each year as hands-free technology became more prevalent." At the same time, "the increased use of smartphones has resulted in an increase every year for summonses for texting while driving, police said."

Indonesian Police To Crack Down On Bootleg Alcohol After 80 Die.

In Bandung, West Java, "141 people have been admitted to hospital with symptoms of alcohol poisoning, authorities said." Police have "promised to stamp out the scourge before the Islamic holy month of Ramadan beginning mid-May, with a new task force being created to handle the assignment." In response to recent poisonings, police have "rounded up sellers of bootleg alcohol in affected areas, and sent samples of seized liquor to the country's Drug and Food Control Agency for forensic evaluation, according to the state-run Antara news agency." Preliminary results "suggested sellers were adding cough medicine and anti-mosquito lotion to the alcohol."

Arizona State University Police Issue Warning About Human Traffickers.

The Post calls it "the first time a suspect sought by the Drug Enforcement Administration has been included among the FBI's top targets." Caro Quintero "is a notorious and uniquely reviled figure at the DEA, blamed for the kidnapping and murder of Enrique 'Kiki' Camarena, a DEA agent who was fatally tortured in 1985 while investigating the now-defunct Guadalajara Cartel." Caro Quintero was sentenced to 40 years for murder soon after that, "but a Mexican judge ordered his release in 2013 and he has since disappeared, evading efforts by U.S. and

Mexican authorities to recapture him.”

Police Using Drones To Boost Security At Coachella Music Festival.

The Los Angeles Times <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=040-18f&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=041-bff&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=042-ce8&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Winton) reports, "A small fleet of drones began to buzz overhead Thursday monitoring traffic and perimeters for the Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival." In the wake of 58 people being killed at a Las Vegas music festival, "Indio police and 14 other local and federal agencies will have more eyes than ever on the crowd thanks to the undermanned aerial surveillance." Indio Police Sgt. Dan Marshall is quoted as saying, "Drones will be flying over watching the perimeters. It takes us a few minutes to get an officer to a perimeter breach but a drone takes 45 seconds. ... The drones will also allow us to monitor traffic better than before."

FBI Recovers Chagall Painting Stolen In 1988.

Under the headline, "Marc Chagall Painting Stolen From New York Apartment Recovered By FBI After 30 Years," the Washington Post <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=043-bb1&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=044-7f0&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=045-0d4&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Hsu) reports that a Marc Chagall painting stolen from a New York City apartment in 1988 "has been recovered by the FBI and is expected to fetch several hundred thousand dollars at auction three decades after it went missing." The Post says "the theft was 'an inside job' by a temporary employee who had access to the apartment building in Manhattan's stately Sutton Place neighborhood when the owners were on vacation, FBI art crimes unit and Washington Field Office Special Agent Marc Hess said." According to the Post, "A Maryland associate of the thief who acquired the work after a dispute tried to sell it last year," but "a Washington art gallery owner balked...because the piece lacked documents proving ownership and referred the would-be seller to the FBI."

The New York Times <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=046-dca&t=c> <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=047-d2a&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018041301iacp&r=7972275-0c2d&l=048-6ea&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/12, Rashbaum) reports that the painting, along with more than a dozen others by Renoir, Picasso, Léger, Hopper, and others were stolen by "a team of sophisticated art thieves with ties to Bulgarian organized crime." Citing the FBI's Hess, the Times reports that the Chagall "was discovered in part because an aging criminal, a terminally ill man who is 72 and who had been involved with Bulgarian organized crime, wanted to make a clean breast of things before he dies."

From concert halls to sports stadiums, nothing ruins an outing like a public safety incident. Whether it's due to a fan's reaction to an unpopular ruling on the field or a more intentional plot to inflict harm, when situations get out of control, the outcome is unpredictable and often dangerous. Imagine a scuffle breaking out at a soccer match in ...

Why should we care about an airport phone system? In the world of Aircraft Rescue Firefighting (ARFF), the crash phone system is the most primary lifeline for mobilizing its First Responders to an emergency situation. A crash phone system is used only in case of emergency alerts, for the deployment of response teams to a potential safety threat, or to ...

From concert halls to sports stadiums, nothing ruins an outing like a public safety incident. Whether it's due to a fan's reaction to an unpopular ruling on the field or a more intentional plot to inflict harm, when situations get out of control, the outcome is unpredictable and often dangerous. Imagine a scuffle breaking out at a soccer match in ...

In the past year, facial recognition use by public safety has seen significant improvements in matching accuracy. Although the confidence level in the technology is rising, there are still many best practices they are missing out on such as human involvement, a critical deciding factor of whether returned leads are viable or not. In this webinar, see how Director of Client Relations for Vigilant Solutions and Retired NYPD Detective, Roger Rodriguez uses Vigilant's FaceSearch to generate investigative leads from images that normally do not meet the criteria for facial recognition searching after vetting and performing specific enhancements.

Register for our webinar: Man v. Machine, and we will explain why the facial recognition process still needs human involvement.

In the past year, facial recognition use by public safety has seen significant improvements in matching accuracy. Although the confidence level in the technology is rising, there are still many best practices they are missing out on such as human involvement, a critical deciding factor of whether returned leads are viable or not. In this webinar, see how Director of Client Relations for Vigilant Solutions and Retired NYPD Detective, Roger Rodriguez uses Vigilant's FaceSearch to generate investigative leads from images that normally do not meet the criteria for facial recognition searching after vetting and performing specific enhancements.

Register for our webinar: Man v. Machine, and we will explain why the facial recognition process still needs human involvement.

In the past year, facial recognition use by public safety has seen significant improvements in matching accuracy. Although the confidence level in the technology is rising, there are still many best practices they are missing out on such as human involvement, a critical deciding factor of whether returned leads are viable or not. In this webinar, see how Director of Client Relations for Vigilant Solutions and Retired NYPD Detective, Roger Rodriguez uses Vigilant's FaceSearch to generate investigative leads from images that normally do not meet the criteria for facial recognition searching after vetting and performing specific enhancements.

Register for our webinar: Man v. Machine, and we will explain why the facial recognition process still needs human involvement.

praised for his 'remarkable restraint' as he arrested the suspected driver of a van that rammed into pedestrians Monday without firing a single shot." Video footage "showed the unidentified officer ordering the suspect, identified as 25-year-old Alek Minassian, to 'get down' or Minassian would be shot." The suspect, who is "accused of killing 10 and injuring 15 others in the assault, was heard in the video yelling at the officer to 'kill me' and 'shoot me in the head,' according to the Toronto Star." officer involved, Toronto Police Chief Mark Saunders praised how he handled the situation." Saunders said, "I can tell you it's directly related to the high-caliber training that takes place. The officers here are taught to use as little force as possible in any given situation. ... The officer did a fantastic job with respect to utilizing his ability of understanding the circumstances and the environment and having a peaceful resolution."

London and New York to Ohio, vehicle attacks are increasingly a popular method used to carry out attacks by mass killers and terrorists." Former DHS counter-terrorism coordinator John Cohen is quoted as saying, "Get a weapon that's easy to acquire and go to a place where a lot of people are congregating and that is the recipe. ... That's the recipe that's being used by people who are conducting attacks on behalf of a terrorist cause, but that's the same recipe that's being used by individuals because of some perceived grievance," and they "decide they want to go commit mass murder. And that's the challenge facing law enforcement. It's not just a terrorism issue, it's a broader issue of mass casualty attacks." ABC News adds that federal, state, and DHS officials "have been warning of vehicle attacks for many years." TSA "warned trucking agencies last year about the threat of a vehicle attack." The TSA report "called for drivers to be aware of suspicious activities and having cities install vehicle barriers around large gatherings."

US Capitol Police spokeswoman Eva Malecki explained the agency will have a "robust presence at practices and at the game." Following last year's shooting, lawmakers "increased the Capitol Police's operating budget to $426.5 million for fiscal year 2018 - a $33.2 million hike from the previous year." The increased budget "includes $7.5 million for the department to enhance its Threat Assessment unit and invest in new technology to protect members."

and police chiefs that use them." The Post explains that training differs among the volunteer officers as state certification is "not required." The Post adds that auxiliary police are "critical pieces to law enforcement agencies, particularly when there's a rush of people to an area, such as Frozen Dead Guy Days in Nederland, or emergencies such as the floods that isolated the Town of Milliken in 2013."

When police received a call about a man about to jump off of an overpass, officers directed truckers to drive into position to shorten the fall if the man jumped. After around four hours the man walked to officers and was taken for medical help. Michigan State Police Lt. Michael Shaw "says troopers typically work with truckers during such incidents, but it's unusual to have so many involved."

Altogether, the act "includes 40 different proposals." Committee Chairman Lamar Alexander said that he hopes the bill will be "on the floor by the summer." The bill would grant the FDA "greater authority to seize and destroy suspicious drug shipments," and would grant funding to the National Institutes of Health "to focus on non-addictive painkillers and expedite FDA review of such drugs."

<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=8737284-3bfa&l=029-113&t=c> (4/24) reports from New York that Daniel Rendon-Herrera, "the alleged leader of a homicidal drug ring that imported tons of cocaine from Colombia into the U.S., was charged with leading a continuing criminal enterprise, authorities said." According to the AP, "Colombia's most wanted drug lord, also known as 'Don Mario,' pleaded not guilty in Brooklyn federal court Tuesday after being captured in a jungle raid nine years ago and extradited to the U.S. on April 23." Authorities said "Rendon-Herrera's organization sent U.S.-bound shipments of cocaine from Colombia through Central America between about June 2003 and December 2014 and employed hit men who carried out acts of violence across North and South America. 'Don Mario was the most feared narco-terrorist in Colombia,' Drug Enforcement Administration Special Agent in Charge James Hunt said in a statement."

Authorities arrested Armando Luis Juarez, "who faces multiple charges of aggravated assault on a police officer in the shootings at the Lake Highlands store." An off-duty police officer working at the Home Depot "had called for assistance after detaining a man, Dallas police Chief U. Renee Hall said." When police arrived, the detained man "produced a handgun" and "shot the responding officers and a store loss-prevention officer, police said." The three victims underwent surgery on Tuesday night. Although officials "refused to discuss the officers' conditions, their tone was mournful as they urged the public to pray for the victims and their families."

Video footage "showed the unidentified officer ordering the suspect, identified as 25-year-old Alek Minassian, to 'get down' or Minassian would be shot." The suspect, who is "accused of killing 10 and injuring 15 others in the assault, was heard in the video yelling at the officer to 'kill me' and 'shoot me in the head,'" according to the Toronto Star." <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=8539988-bb0c&l=007-0cf&t=c> ABC News <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=8539988-bb0c&l=008-04f&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=8539988-bb0c&l=009-89e&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/24, Winsor) reports, "Without naming the officer involved, Toronto Police Chief Mark Saunders praised how he handled the situation." Saunders said, "I can tell you it's directly related to the high-caliber training that takes place. The officers here are taught to use as little force as possible in any given situation. ... The officer did a fantastic job with respect to utilizing his ability of understanding the circumstances and the environment and having a peaceful resolution."

Former DHS counter-terrorism coordinator John Cohen is quoted as saying, "Get a weapon that's easy to acquire and go to a place where a lot of people are congregating and that is the recipe. ... That's the recipe that's being used by people who are conducting attacks on behalf of a terrorist cause, but that's the same recipe that's being used by individuals because of some perceived grievance," and they "decide they want to go commit mass murder. And that's the challenge facing law enforcement. It's not just a terrorism issue, it's a broader issue of mass casualty attacks." ABC News adds that federal, state, and DHS officials "have been warning of vehicle attacks for many years." TSA "warned trucking agencies last year about the threat of a vehicle attack." The TSA report "called for drivers to be aware of suspicious activities and having cities install vehicle barriers around large gatherings."

US Capital Police Plan "Robust Presence" For Lawmakers' Baseball Practice.

The Post says their duties and level of supervision they have are "decided by the sheriffs and police chiefs that use them." The Post explains that training differs among the volunteer officers as state certification is "not required." The Post adds that auxiliary police are "critical pieces to law enforcement agencies, particularly when there's a rush of people to an area, such as Frozen Dead Guy Days in Nederland, or emergencies such as the floods that isolated the Town of Milliken in 2013."

When police received a call about a man about to jump off of an overpass, officers directed truckers to drive into position to shorten the fall if the man jumped. After around four hours the man walked to officers and was taken for medical help. Michigan State Police Lt. Michael Shaw "says troopers typically work with truckers during such incidents, but it's unusual to have so many involved."

Authorities arrested Armando Luis Juarez, "who faces multiple charges of aggravated assault on a police officer in the shootings at the Lake Highlands store." An off-duty police officer working at the Home Depot "had called for assistance after detaining a man, Dallas police Chief U. Renee Hall said." When police arrived, the detained man "produced a handgun" and "shot the responding officers and a store loss-prevention officer, police said." The three victims underwent surgery on Tuesday night. Although officials "refused to discuss the officers' conditions, their tone was mournful as they urged the public to pray for the victims and their families."

praised for his 'remarkable restraint' as he arrested the suspected driver of a van that rammed into pedestrians Monday without firing a single shot." Video footage "showed the unidentified officer ordering the suspect, identified as 25-year-old Alek Minassian, to 'get down' or Minassian would be shot." The suspect, who is "accused of killing 10 and injuring 15 others in the assault, was heard in the video yelling at the officer to 'kill me' and 'shoot me in the head,' according to the Toronto Star." London and New York to Ohio, vehicle attacks are increasingly a popular method used to carry out attacks by mass killers and terrorists." Former DHS counter-terrorism coordinator John Cohen is quoted as saying, "Get a weapon that's easy to acquire and go to a place where a lot of people are congregating and that is the recipe. ... That's the recipe that's being used by people who are conducting attacks on behalf of a terrorist cause, but that's the same recipe that's being used by individuals because of some perceived grievance," and they "decide they want to go commit mass murder. And that's the challenge facing law enforcement. It's not just a terrorism issue, it's a broader issue of mass casualty attacks." ABC News adds that federal, state, and DHS officials "have been warning of vehicle attacks for many years." TSA "warned trucking agencies last year about the threat of a vehicle attack." The TSA report "called for drivers to be aware of suspicious activities and having cities install vehicle barriers around large gatherings."

When police received a call about a man about to jump off of an overpass, officers directed truckers to drive into position to shorten the fall if the man jumped. After around four hours the man walked to officers and was taken for medical help. Michigan State Police Lt. Michael Shaw "says troopers typically work with truckers during such incidents, but it's unusual to have so many involved."

Altogether, the act "includes 40 different proposals." Committee Chairman Lamar Alexander said that he hopes the bill will be "on the floor by the summer." The bill would grant the FDA "greater authority to seize and destroy suspicious drug shipments," and would grant funding to the National Institutes of Health "to focus on non-addictive painkillers and expedite FDA review of such drugs."

According to the AP, "Colombia's most wanted drug lord, also known as 'Don Mario,' pleaded not guilty in Brooklyn federal court Tuesday after being captured in a jungle raid nine years ago and extradited to the U.S. on April 23." Authorities said "Rendon-Herrera's organization sent U.S.-bound shipments of cocaine from Colombia through Central America between about June 2003 and December 2014 and employed hit men who carried out acts of violence across North and South America. 'Don Mario was the most feared narco-terrorist in Colombia,' Drug Enforcement Administration Special Agent in Charge James Hunt said in a statement."

Authorities arrested Armando Luis Juarez, "who faces multiple charges of aggravated assault on a police officer in the shootings at the Lake Highlands store." An off-duty police officer working at the Home Depot "had called for assistance after detaining a man, Dallas police Chief U. Renee Hall said." When police arrived, the detained man "produced a handgun" and "shot the responding officers and a store loss-prevention officer, police said." The three victims underwent surgery on Tuesday night. Although officials "refused to discuss the officers' conditions, their tone was mournful as they urged the public to pray for the victims and their families."

reports, "A Toronto police officer was praised for his 'remarkable restraint' as he arrested the suspected driver of a van that rammed into pedestrians Monday without firing a single shot." Video footage "showed the unidentified officer ordering the suspect, identified as 25-year-old Alek Minassian, to 'get down' or Minassian would be shot." The suspect, who is "accused of killing 10 and injuring 15 others in the assault, was heard in the video yelling at the officer to 'kill me' and 'shoot me in the head,'" according to the Toronto Star." <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=7963908-e314&l=007-0cf&t=c> ABC News <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=7963908-e314&l=008-04f&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=7963908-e314&l=009-89e&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/24, Winsor) reports, "Without naming the officer involved, Toronto Police Chief Mark Saunders praised how he handled the situation." Saunders said, "I can tell you it's directly related to the high-caliber training that takes place. The officers here are taught to use as little force as possible in any given situation. ... The officer did a fantastic job with respect to utilizing his ability of understanding the circumstances and the environment and having a peaceful resolution."

Former DHS counter-terrorism coordinator John Cohen is quoted as saying, "Get a weapon that's easy to acquire and go to a place where a lot of people are congregating and that is the recipe. ... That's the recipe that's being used by people who are conducting attacks on behalf of a terrorist cause, but that's the same recipe that's being used by individuals because of some perceived grievance," and they "decide they want to go commit mass murder. And that's the challenge facing law enforcement. It's not just a terrorism issue, it's a broader issue of mass casualty attacks." ABC News adds that federal, state, and DHS officials "have been warning of vehicle attacks for many years." TSA "warned trucking agencies last year about the threat of a vehicle attack." The TSA report "called for drivers to be aware of suspicious activities and having cities install vehicle barriers around large gatherings."

US Capital Police Plan "Robust Presence" For Lawmakers' Baseball Practice.

US Capitol Police spokeswoman Eva Malecki explained the agency will have a "robust presence at practices and at the game." Following last year's shooting, lawmakers "increased the Capitol Police's operating budget to $426.5 million for fiscal year 2018 - a $33.2 million hike from the previous year." The increased budget "includes $7.5 million for the department to enhance its Threat Assessment unit and invest in new technology to protect members."

The Post says their duties and level of supervision they have are "decided by the sheriffs and police chiefs that use them." The Post explains that training differs among the volunteer officers as state certification is "not required." The Post adds that auxiliary police are "critical pieces to law enforcement agencies, particularly when there's a rush of people to an area, such as Frozen Dead Guy Days in Nederland, or emergencies such as the floods that isolated the Town of Milliken in 2013."

When police received a call about a man about to jump off of an overpass, officers directed truckers to drive into position to shorten the fall if the man jumped. After around four hours the man walked to officers and was taken for medical help. Michigan State Police Lt. Michael Shaw "says troopers typically work with truckers during such incidents, but it's unusual to have so many involved."

Altogether, the act "includes 40 different proposals." Committee Chairman Lamar Alexander said that he hopes the bill will be "on the floor by the summer." The bill would grant the FDA "greater authority to seize and destroy suspicious drug shipments," and would grant funding to the National Institutes of Health "to focus on non-addictive painkillers and expedite FDA review of such drugs."

According to the AP, "Colombia's most wanted drug lord, also known as 'Don Mario,' pleaded not guilty in Brooklyn federal court Tuesday after being captured in a jungle raid nine years ago and extradited to the U.S. on April 23." Authorities said "Rendon-Herrera's organization sent U.S.-bound shipments of cocaine from Colombia through Central America between about June 2003 and December 2014 and employed hit men who carried out acts of violence across North and South America. 'Don Mario was the most feared narco-terrorist in Colombia,' Drug Enforcement Administration Special Agent in Charge James Hunt said in a statement."

Rendon-Herrera "flew into the Big Apple early Monday - nine years after he was arrested for running a drug trafficking paramilitary gang that prosecutors say shipped huge quantities of cocaine around the world and killed those who stood in its way. 'Rendon-Herrera led a major Colombian drug trafficking enterprise that imported tons of cocaine into the United States and employed hitmen who carried out acts of violence across North and South America in furtherance of the organization,' US Attorney Richard Donoghue said in a statement Tuesday."

Authorities arrested Armando Luis Juarez, "who faces multiple charges of aggravated assault on a police officer in the shootings at the Lake Highlands store." An off-duty police officer working at the Home Depot "had called for assistance after detaining a man, Dallas police Chief U. Renee Hall said." When police arrived, the detained man "produced a handgun" and "shot the responding officers and a store loss-prevention officer, police said." The three victims underwent surgery on Tuesday night. Although officials "refused to discuss the officers' conditions, their tone was mournful as they urged the public to pray for the victims and their families."

London and New York to Ohio, vehicle attacks are increasingly a popular method used to carry out attacks by mass killers and terrorists." Former DHS counter-terrorism coordinator John Cohen is quoted as saying, "Get a weapon that's easy to acquire and go to a place where a lot of people are congregating and that is the recipe. ... That's the recipe that's being used by people who are conducting attacks on behalf of a terrorist cause, but that's the same recipe that's being used by individuals because of some perceived grievance," and they "decide they want to go commit mass murder. And that's the challenge facing law enforcement. It's not just a terrorism issue, it's a broader issue of mass casualty attacks." ABC News adds that federal, state, and DHS officials "have been warning of vehicle attacks for many years." TSA "warned trucking agencies last year about the threat of a vehicle attack." The TSA report "called for drivers to be aware of suspicious activities and having cities install vehicle barriers around large gatherings."

Altogether, the act "includes 40 different proposals." Committee Chairman Lamar Alexander said that he hopes the bill will be "on the floor by the summer." The bill would grant the FDA "greater authority to seize and destroy suspicious drug shipments," and would grant funding to the National Institutes of Health "to focus on non-addictive painkillers and expedite FDA review of such drugs."

Authorities arrested Armando Luis Juarez, "who faces multiple charges of aggravated assault on a police officer in the shootings at the Lake Highlands store." An off-duty police officer working at the Home Depot "had called for assistance after detaining a man, Dallas police Chief U. Renee Hall said." When police arrived, the detained man "produced a handgun" and "shot the responding officers and a store loss-prevention officer, police said." The three victims underwent surgery on Tuesday night. Although officials "refused to discuss the officers' conditions, their tone was mournful as they urged the public to pray for the victims and their families."

When police received a call about a man about to jump off of an overpass, officers directed truckers to drive into position to shorten the fall if the man jumped. After around four hours the man walked to officers and was taken for medical help. Michigan State Police Lt. Michael Shaw "says troopers typically work with truckers during such incidents, but it's unusual to have so many involved."

According to the AP, "Colombia's most wanted drug lord, also known as 'Don Mario,' pleaded not guilty in Brooklyn federal court Tuesday after being captured in a jungle raid nine years ago and extradited to the U.S. on April 23." Authorities said "Rendon-Herrera's organization sent U.S.-bound shipments of cocaine from Colombia through Central America between about June 2003 and December 2014 and employed hit men who carried out acts of violence across North and South America. 'Don Mario was the most feared narco-terrorist in Colombia,' Drug Enforcement Administration Special Agent in Charge James Hunt said in a statement."

Authorities arrested Armando Luis Juarez, "who faces multiple charges of aggravated assault on a police officer in the shootings at the Lake Highlands store." An off-duty police officer working at the Home Depot "had called for assistance after detaining a man, Dallas police Chief U. Renee Hall said." When police arrived, the detained man "produced a handgun" and "shot the responding officers and a store loss-prevention officer, police said." The three victims underwent surgery on Tuesday night. Although officials "refused to discuss the officers' conditions, their tone was mournful as they urged the public to pray for the victims and their families."

reports, "A Toronto police officer was praised for his 'remarkable restraint' as he arrested the suspected driver of a van that rammed into pedestrians Monday without firing a single shot." Video footage "showed the unidentified officer ordering the suspect, identified as 25-year-old Alek Minassian, to 'get down' or Minassian would be shot." The suspect, who is "accused of killing 10 and injuring 15 others in the assault, was heard in the video yelling at the officer to 'kill me' and 'shoot me in the head,'" according to the Toronto Star." <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=7979436-a3b1&l=007-0cf&t=c> ABC News <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=7979436-a3b1&l=008-04f&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=7979436-a3b1&l=009-89e&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/24, Winsor) reports, "Without naming the officer involved, Toronto Police Chief Mark Saunders praised how he handled the situation." Saunders said, "I can tell you it's directly related to the high-caliber training that takes place. The officers here are taught to use as little force as possible in any given situation. ... The officer did a fantastic job with respect to utilizing his ability of understanding the circumstances and the environment and having a peaceful resolution."

Former DHS counter-terrorism coordinator John Cohen is quoted as saying, "Get a weapon that's easy to acquire and go to a place where a lot of people are congregating and that is the recipe. ... That's the recipe that's being used by people who are conducting attacks on behalf of a terrorist cause, but that's the same recipe that's being used by individuals because of some perceived grievance," and they "decide they want to go commit mass murder. And that's the challenge facing law enforcement. It's not just a terrorism issue, it's a broader issue of mass casualty attacks." ABC News adds that federal, state, and DHS officials "have been warning of vehicle attacks for many years." TSA "warned trucking agencies last year about the threat of a vehicle attack." The TSA report "called for drivers to be aware of suspicious activities and having cities install vehicle barriers around large gatherings."

When police received a call about a man about to jump off of an overpass, officers directed truckers to drive into position to shorten the fall if the man jumped. After around four hours the man walked to officers and was taken for medical help. Michigan State Police Lt. Michael Shaw "says troopers typically work with truckers during such incidents, but it's unusual to have so many involved."

According to the AP, "Colombia's most wanted drug lord, also known as 'Don Mario,' pleaded not guilty in Brooklyn federal court Tuesday after being captured in a jungle raid nine years ago and extradited to the U.S. on April 23." Authorities said "Rendon-Herrera's organization sent U.S.-bound shipments of cocaine from Colombia through Central America between about June 2003 and December 2014 and employed hit men who carried out acts of violence across North and South America. 'Don Mario was the most feared narco-terrorist in Colombia,' Drug Enforcement Administration Special Agent in Charge James Hunt said in a statement."

Authorities arrested Armando Luis Juarez, "who faces multiple charges of aggravated assault on a police officer in the shootings at the Lake Highlands store." An off-duty police officer working at the Home Depot "had called for assistance after detaining a man, Dallas police Chief U. Renee Hall said." When police arrived, the detained man "produced a handgun" and "shot the responding officers and a store loss-prevention officer, police said." The three victims underwent surgery on Tuesday night. Although officials "refused to discuss the officers' conditions, their tone was mournful as they urged the public to pray for the victims and their families."

Former DHS counter-terrorism coordinator John Cohen is quoted as saying, "Get a weapon that's easy to acquire and go to a place where a lot of people are congregating and that is the recipe. ... That's the recipe that's being used by people who are conducting attacks on behalf of a terrorist cause, but that's the same recipe that's being used by individuals because of some perceived grievance," and they "decide they want to go commit mass murder. According to the AP, "Colombia's most wanted drug lord, also known as 'Don Mario,' pleaded not guilty in Brooklyn federal court Tuesday after being captured in a jungle raid nine years ago and extradited to the U.S. on April 23." Authorities said "Rendon-Herrera's organization sent U.S.-bound shipments of cocaine from Colombia through Central America between about June 2003 and December 2014 and employed hit men who carried out acts of violence across North and South America. 'Don Mario was the most feared narco-terrorist in Colombia,' Drug Enforcement Administration Special Agent in Charge James Hunt said in a statement."

Authorities arrested Armando Luis Juarez, "who faces multiple charges of aggravated assault on a police officer in the shootings at the Lake Highlands store." An off-duty police officer working at the Home Depot "had called for assistance after detaining a man, Dallas police Chief U. Renee Hall said." When police arrived, the detained man "produced a handgun" and "shot the responding officers and a store loss-prevention officer, police said." The three victims underwent surgery on Tuesday night. Although officials "refused to discuss the officers' conditions, their tone was mournful as they urged the public to pray for the victims and their families."

London and New York to Ohio, vehicle attacks are increasingly a popular method used to carry out attacks by mass killers and terrorists." Former DHS counter-terrorism coordinator John Cohen is quoted as saying, "Get a weapon that's easy to acquire and go to a place where a lot of people are congregating and that is the recipe. ... That's the recipe that's being used by people who are conducting attacks on behalf of a terrorist cause, but that's the same recipe that's being used by individuals because of some perceived grievance," and they "decide they want to go commit mass murder. And that's the challenge facing law enforcement. It's not just a terrorism issue, it's a broader issue of mass casualty attacks." ABC News adds that federal, state, and DHS officials "have been warning of vehicle attacks for many years." TSA "warned trucking agencies last year about the threat of a vehicle attack." When police received a call about a man about to jump off of an overpass, officers directed truckers to drive into position to shorten the fall if the man jumped. After around four hours the man walked to officers and was taken for medical help. Michigan State Police Lt. Michael Shaw "says troopers typically work with truckers during such incidents, but it's unusual to have so many involved."

reports, "A Toronto police officer was praised for his 'remarkable restraint' as he arrested the suspected driver of a van that rammed into pedestrians Monday without firing a single shot." Video footage "showed the unidentified officer ordering the suspect, identified as 25-year-old Alek Minassian, to 'get down' or Minassian would be shot." The suspect, who is "accused of killing 10 and injuring 15 others in the assault, was heard in the video yelling at the officer to 'kill me' and 'shoot me in the head,'" according to the Toronto Star." <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=7968590-2dcc&l=007-0cf&t=c> ABC News <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=7968590-2dcc&l=008-04f&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=7968590-2dcc&l=009-89e&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/24, Winsor) reports, "Without naming the officer involved, Toronto Police Chief Mark Saunders praised how he handled the situation." Saunders said, "I can tell you it's directly related to the high-caliber training that takes place. The officers here are taught to use as little force as possible in any given situation. ... The officer did a fantastic job with respect to utilizing his ability of understanding the circumstances and the environment and having a peaceful resolution."

Former DHS counter-terrorism coordinator John Cohen is quoted as saying, "Get a weapon that's easy to acquire and go to a place where a lot of people are congregating and that is the recipe. ... That's the recipe that's being used by people who are conducting attacks on behalf of a terrorist cause, but that's the same recipe that's being used by individuals because of some perceived grievance," and they "decide they want to go commit mass murder. And that's the challenge facing law enforcement. It's not just a terrorism issue, it's a broader issue of mass casualty attacks." ABC News adds that federal, state, and DHS officials "have been warning of vehicle attacks for many years." TSA "warned trucking agencies last year about the threat of a vehicle attack." The TSA report "called for drivers to be aware of suspicious activities and having cities install vehicle barriers around large gatherings."

US Capitol Police spokeswoman Eva Malecki explained the agency will have a "robust presence at practices and at the game." Following last year's shooting, lawmakers "increased the Capitol Police's operating budget to $426.5 million for fiscal year 2018 - a $33.2 million hike from the previous year." The increased budget "includes $7.5 million for the department to enhance its Threat Assessment unit and invest in new technology to protect members."

The Post says their duties and level of supervision they have are "decided by the sheriffs and police chiefs that use them." The Post explains that training differs among the volunteer officers as state certification is "not required." The Post adds that auxiliary police are "critical pieces to law enforcement agencies, particularly when there's a rush of people to an area, such as Frozen Dead Guy Days in Nederland, or emergencies such as the floods that isolated the Town of Milliken in 2013."

When police received a call about a man about to jump off of an overpass, officers directed truckers to drive into position to shorten the fall if the man jumped. After around four hours the man walked to officers and was taken for medical help. Michigan State Police Lt. Michael Shaw "says troopers typically work with truckers during such incidents, but it's unusual to have so many involved."

Altogether, the act "includes 40 different proposals." Committee Chairman Lamar Alexander said that he hopes the bill will be "on the floor by the summer." The bill would grant the FDA "greater authority to seize and destroy suspicious drug shipments," and would grant funding to the National Institutes of Health "to focus on non-addictive painkillers and expedite FDA review of such drugs."

Reputed Colombian Drug Lord Extradited To Face US Charges.

According to the AP, "Colombia's most wanted drug lord, also known as 'Don Mario,' pleaded not guilty in Brooklyn federal court Tuesday after being captured in a jungle raid nine years ago and extradited to the U.S. on April 23." Authorities said "Rendon-Herrera's organization sent U.S.-bound shipments of cocaine from Colombia through Central America between about June 2003 and December 2014 and employed hit men who carried out acts of violence across North and South America. 'Don Mario was the most feared narco-terrorist in Colombia,' Drug Enforcement Administration Special Agent in Charge James Hunt said in a statement."

Rendon-Herrera "flew into the Big Apple early Monday - nine years after he was arrested for running a drug trafficking paramilitary gang that prosecutors say shipped huge quantities of cocaine around the world and killed those who stood in its way. 'Rendon-Herrera led a major Colombian drug trafficking enterprise that imported tons of cocaine into the United States and employed hitmen who carried out acts of violence across North and South America in furtherance of the organization,' US Attorney Richard Donoghue said in a statement Tuesday."

Authorities arrested Armando Luis Juarez, "who faces multiple charges of aggravated assault on a police officer in the shootings at the Lake Highlands store." An off-duty police officer working at the Home Depot "had called for assistance after detaining a man, Dallas police Chief U. Renee Hall said." When police arrived, the detained man "produced a handgun" and "shot the responding officers and a store loss-prevention officer, police said." The three victims underwent surgery on Tuesday night. Although officials "refused to discuss the officers' conditions, their tone was mournful as they urged the public to pray for the victims and their families."

<http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=8737284-3bfa&l=006-714&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/24) reports, "A Toronto police officer was praised for his 'remarkable restraint' as he arrested the suspected driver of a van that rammed into pedestrians Monday without firing a single shot." Video footage "showed the unidentified officer ordering the suspect, identified as 25-year-old Alek Minassian, to 'get down' or Minassian would be shot." The suspect, who is "accused of killing 10 and injuring 15 others in the assault, was heard in the video yelling at the officer to 'kill me' and 'shoot me in the head,'" according to the Toronto Star." <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=8737284-3bfa&l=007-0cf&t=c> ABC News <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=8737284-3bfa&l=008-04f&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042501iacp&r=8737284-3bfa&l=009-89e&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/24, Winsor) reports, "Without naming the officer involved, Toronto Police Chief Mark Saunders praised how he handled the situation." Saunders said, "I can tell you it's directly related to the high-caliber training that takes place. The officers here are taught to use as little force as possible in any given situation. ... The officer did a fantastic job with respect to utilizing his ability of understanding the circumstances and the environment and having a peaceful resolution."

Former DHS counter-terrorism coordinator John Cohen is quoted as saying, "Get a weapon that's easy to acquire and go to a place where a lot of people are congregating and that is the recipe. ... That's the recipe that's being used by people who are conducting attacks on behalf of a terrorist cause, but that's the same recipe that's being used by individuals because of some perceived grievance," and they "decide they want to go commit mass murder. And that's the challenge facing law enforcement. It's not just a terrorism issue, it's a broader issue of mass casualty attacks." ABC News adds that federal, state, and DHS officials "have been warning of vehicle attacks for many years." TSA "warned trucking agencies last year about the threat of a vehicle attack." The TSA report "called for drivers to be aware of suspicious activities and having cities install vehicle barriers around large gatherings."

US Capital Police Plan "Robust Presence" For Lawmakers' Baseball Practice.

US Capitol Police spokeswoman Eva Malecki explained the agency will have a "robust presence at practices and at the game." Following last year's shooting, lawmakers "increased the Capitol Police's operating budget to $426.5 million for fiscal year 2018 - a $33.2 million hike from the previous year." The increased budget "includes $7.5 million for the department to enhance its Threat Assessment unit and invest in new technology to protect members."

The Post says their duties and level of supervision they have are "decided by the sheriffs and police chiefs that use them." The Post explains that training differs among the volunteer officers as state certification is "not required." The Post adds that auxiliary police are "critical pieces to law enforcement agencies, particularly when there's a rush of people to an area, such as Frozen Dead Guy Days in Nederland, or emergencies such as the floods that isolated the Town of Milliken in 2013."

When police received a call about a man about to jump off of an overpass, officers directed truckers to drive into position to shorten the fall if the man jumped. After around four hours the man walked to officers and was taken for medical help. Michigan State Police Lt. Michael Shaw "says troopers typically work with truckers during such incidents, but it's unusual to have so many involved."

Altogether, the act "includes 40 different proposals." Committee Chairman Lamar Alexander said that he hopes the bill will be "on the floor by the summer." The bill would grant the FDA "greater authority to seize and destroy suspicious drug shipments," and would grant funding to the National Institutes of Health "to focus on non-addictive painkillers and expedite FDA review of such drugs."

Reputed Colombian Drug Lord Extradited To Face US Charges.

According to the AP, "Colombia's most wanted drug lord, also known as 'Don Mario,' pleaded not guilty in Brooklyn federal court Tuesday after being captured in a jungle raid nine years ago and extradited to the U.S. on April 23." Authorities said "Rendon-Herrera's organization sent U.S.-bound shipments of cocaine from Colombia through Central America between about June 2003 and December 2014 and employed hit men who carried out acts of violence across North and South America. 'Don Mario was the most feared narco-terrorist in Colombia,' Drug Enforcement Administration Special Agent in Charge James Hunt said in a statement."

Rendon-Herrera "flew into the Big Apple early Monday - nine years after he was arrested for running a drug trafficking paramilitary gang that prosecutors say shipped huge quantities of cocaine around the world and killed those who stood in its way. 'Rendon-Herrera led a major Colombian drug trafficking enterprise that imported tons of cocaine into the United States and employed hitmen who carried out acts of violence across North and South America in furtherance of the organization,' US Attorney Richard Donoghue said in a statement Tuesday."

Authorities arrested Armando Luis Juarez, "who faces multiple charges of aggravated assault on a police officer in the shootings at the Lake Highlands store." An off-duty police officer working at the Home Depot "had called for assistance after detaining a man, Dallas police Chief U. Renee Hall said." When police arrived, the detained man "produced a handgun" and "shot the responding officers and a store loss-prevention officer, police said." The three victims underwent surgery on Tuesday night. Although officials "refused to discuss the officers' conditions, their tone was mournful as they urged the public to pray for the victims and their families."

reports, "A onetime cop who's been living quietly in the Sacramento suburbs was fingered Wednesday as the 'East Area Rapist,' with authorities saying DNA helped link him to a string of at least 12 slayings and 45 rapes that terrorized communities in the Bay Area and across California from 1976 to 1986." Joseph James DeAngelo, a "police officer in Placer and Tulare counties at the time some of the crimes were committed, was arrested in what had been one of the most heinous unsolved crime sprees in U.S. history." In addition to the homicides and rapes, authorities "suspect DeAngelo committed more than 150 home break-ins across the state." Sacramento County District Attorney Anne Marie Schubert is quoted as saying, "It is fitting that today is National DNA Day. ... We found the needle in the haystack, and it was right here in Sacramento." Law enforcement agencies across California "formed a task force in 2016, after Schubert held a news conference to mark the 40-year anniversary of the first known crime." While not providing specific details on how DeAngelo was caught, Sacramento Sheriff Scott Jones "said examination of old crime-scene DNA had narrowed the suspects."

Law enforcement officials "say that administrators of Webstresser.org were arrested Tuesday, in Britain, Croatia, Canada and Serbia." The service was "taken offline and its hardware was seized in the United States, the Netherlands and Germany, officials said." Customers "allegedly paid Webstresser to carry out cyberattacks on financial institutions, governments and law enforcement agencies using a method known as a Distributed Denial of Service, or DDoS, bombarding a site with a flood of requests to overwhelm it, according to Europol." The investigation, called Operation Power Off, was "led by the Dutch police and Britain's National Crime Agency, with support from Europol and other law enforcement agencies." The recruits are a "trial wing being run from Tamaki Makarau in a bid to bolster police numbers in the city and attract recruits who have been held back or put off joining the organisation in the past due to the training being held in Wellington." Royal New Zealand Police College Inspector Iain Saunders "said the pilot came about following direct feedback from potential recruits, whom for many said that moving to Wellington for 16 weeks was a real barrier to joining police - particularly those with young children or family or personal commitments." Saunders "said Auckland was the biggest and most demanding policing area in the country and it made sense to recruit police from the city who could go straight in and work after training without having to worry about relocating their whole lives and getting to know a place they've never lived or worked before."

Share to Twitter (4/26, Ravani, Gutierrez, Lyons and Haigney) reports, "A onetime cop who's been living quietly in the Sacramento suburbs was fingered Wednesday as the 'East Area Rapist,' with authorities saying DNA helped link him to a string of at least 12 slayings and 45 rapes that terrorized communities in the Bay Area and across California from 1976 to 1986." Joseph James DeAngelo, a "police officer in Placer and Tulare counties at the time some of the crimes were committed, was arrested in what had been one of the most heinous unsolved crime sprees in U.S. history." In addition to the homicides and rapes, authorities "suspect DeAngelo committed more than 150 home break-ins across the state." Sacramento County District Attorney Anne Marie Schubert is quoted as saying, "It is fitting that today is National DNA Day. ... We found the needle in the haystack, and it was right here in Sacramento." Law enforcement agencies across California "formed a task force in 2016, after Schubert held a news conference to mark the 40-year anniversary of the first known crime." While not providing specific details on how DeAngelo was caught, Sacramento Sheriff Scott Jones "said examination of old crime-scene DNA had narrowed the suspects."

Share to Twitter (4/25, Greenwood) reports, "The FBI and California state officials issued a renewed call to find the suspected attacker in 2016, offering a $50,000 reward for information leading to the attacker's arrest and conviction." The Hill quotes Sean Ragan, special agent in charge at the FBI's Sacramento field office, saying, "Countless hours have gone into this investigation, and this team came together and worked consistently to bring justice in this matter and to identify the subject responsible."

The AP adds, "Although it's unusual for serial killers to stop, Jones said they have no reason to think DeAngelo continued to commit crimes after 1986, when the last rape and killing occurred in Orange County." The AP also reported, "FBI agents and other investigators were gathering evidence at DeAngelo's neatly kept home on Wednesday."

International Police Effort Leads To Shutdown Of Webstresser.org.

Law enforcement officials "say that administrators of Webstresser.org were arrested Tuesday, in Britain, Croatia, Canada and Serbia." The service was "taken offline and its hardware was seized in the United States, the Netherlands and Germany, officials said." Customers "allegedly paid Webstresser to carry out cyberattacks on financial institutions, governments and law enforcement agencies using a method known as a Distributed Denial of Service, or DDoS, bombarding a site with a flood of requests to overwhelm it, according to Europol." The investigation, called Operation Power Off, was "led by the Dutch police and Britain's National Crime Agency, with support from Europol and other law enforcement agencies." The head of Europol's European Cybercrime Center Steven Wilson "said the rise of cyberattacks for hire will require a deepened level of international cooperation."

Proposed Bill Would Expand US National Threat Assessment Center.

The Beau Biden Gun Violence Protection Act would allow police to temporarily seize firearms from someone deemed a danger to themselves or others by mental health professionals." The measure "now heads to the desk of Gov. John Carney (D), who has said he will sign it." The bill, which "is named after Delaware's late attorney general and former Vice President Joe Biden's son who died in 2015 following a battle with brain cancer," is similar to a measure "that Beau Biden had proposed in 2013 but which ended up failing in the state Senate."

Share to Twitter (4/25, York) reports, "New gun control measures have been passed in" Delaware and Maryland "that will allow police to temporarily seize firearms from people deemed to be a danger to themselves or others." The measures "are just the latest in a string of efforts in at least a dozen states to create safer gun policies following the mass shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in February, and gun control activists say the movement to pass these sorts of bills shows that the efforts are continuing to gain momentum."

Toronto Attacker Possibly Tied To "Incel" Community.

Incel, short for "involuntary celibates," was a term created 20 years ago by a woman who "hoped [her website] would provide a supportive outlet for lonely hearts." In the years since the phrase was created, it has been "co-opted by online trolls and violent misogynists, including allegedly Alek Minassian, the driver accused of killing 10 people in Toronto on Monday." The article says the online incel community "spent Tuesday celebrating the attack he is alleged to have carried out." New Zealand Police To Hold Training In New Area To Reach Potential New Recruits.

The recruits are a "trial wing being run from Tamaki Makarau in a bid to bolster police numbers in the city and attract recruits who have been held back or put off joining the organisation in the past due to the training being held in Wellington." Royal New Zealand Police College Inspector Iain Saunders "said the pilot came about following direct feedback from potential recruits, whom for many said that moving to Wellington for 16 weeks was a real barrier to joining police - particularly those with young children or family or personal commitments." Saunders "said Auckland was the biggest and most demanding policing area in the country and it made sense to recruit police from the city who could go straight in and work after training without having to worry about relocating their whole lives and getting to know a place they've never lived or worked before."

New Hampshire US Attorney Scott Murray "said Wednesday the operation, allegedly headed by Sergio and Raulin Martinez, used dispatchers and distributors to channel fentanyl from Lawrence, Massachusetts, into New Hampshire." Murray "said authorities believe it's the largest fentanyl case to be prosecuted in the district," and "he said 32 people from the Lawrence area and 13 from New Hampshire were indicted."

Prosecutors "charged 28-year-old Sergio Martinez and 36-year-old Raulin Martinez - along with 27 other Massachusetts residents and 15 New Hampshire residents - with participating in a conspiracy to distribute fentanyl and possession with intent to distribute fentanyl, a statement from the New Hampshire Department of Justice's office said. 'Fentanyl is responsible for the lion's share of overdose deaths in the Granite State,'" Murray said in a statement. The Globe adds, "the Martinez brothers allegedly worked out of a 'base' in Lawrence that was staffed by dispatchers who took drug orders over several 'customer phones,'" and "the dispatchers would then arrange meetings between customers and distributors located throughout the Merrimack Valley, according to the statement."

Former Police Officer Charged With Murders Credited To Golden State Killer.

Share to Twitter (4/26, Ravani, Gutierrez, Lyons and Haigney) reports, "A onetime cop who's been living quietly in the Sacramento suburbs was fingered Wednesday as the 'East Area Rapist,' with authorities saying DNA helped link him to a string of at least 12 slayings and 45 rapes that terrorized communities in the Bay Area and across California from 1976 to 1986." Joseph James DeAngelo, a "police officer in Placer and Tulare counties at the time some of the crimes were committed, was arrested in what had been one of the most heinous unsolved crime sprees in U.S. history." In addition to the homicides and rapes, authorities "suspect DeAngelo committed more than 150 home break-ins across the state." Sacramento County District Attorney Anne Marie Schubert is quoted as saying, "It is fitting that today is National DNA Day. ... We found the needle in the haystack, and it was right here in Sacramento." Law enforcement agencies across California "formed a task force in 2016, after Schubert held a news conference to mark the 40-year anniversary of the first known crime." While not providing specific details on how DeAngelo was caught, Sacramento Sheriff Scott Jones "said examination of old crime-scene DNA had narrowed the suspects."

Share to Twitter (4/25, Greenwood) reports, "The FBI and California state officials issued a renewed call to find the suspected attacker in 2016, offering a $50,000 reward for information leading to the attacker's arrest and conviction." The Hill quotes Sean Ragan, special agent in charge at the FBI's Sacramento field office, saying, "Countless hours have gone into this investigation, and this team came together and worked consistently to bring justice in this matter and to identify the subject responsible."

The AP adds, "Although it's unusual for serial killers to stop, Jones said they have no reason to think DeAngelo continued to commit crimes after 1986, when the last rape and killing occurred in Orange County." The AP also reported, "FBI agents and other investigators were gathering evidence at DeAngelo's neatly kept home on Wednesday."

International Police Effort Leads To Shutdown Of Webstresser.org.

Law enforcement officials "say that administrators of Webstresser.org were arrested Tuesday, in Britain, Croatia, Canada and Serbia." The service was "taken offline and its hardware was seized in the United States, the Netherlands and Germany, officials said." Customers "allegedly paid Webstresser to carry out cyberattacks on financial institutions, governments and law enforcement agencies using a method known as a Distributed Denial of Service, or DDoS, bombarding a site with a flood of requests to overwhelm it, according to Europol." The investigation, called Operation Power Off, was "led by the Dutch police and Britain's National Crime Agency, with support from Europol and other law enforcement agencies." The head of Europol's European Cybercrime Center Steven Wilson "said the rise of cyberattacks for hire will require a deepened level of international cooperation."

Proposed Bill Would Expand US National Threat Assessment Center.

The Beau Biden Gun Violence Protection Act would allow police to temporarily seize firearms from someone deemed a danger to themselves or others by mental health professionals." The measure "now heads to the desk of Gov. John Carney (D), who has said he will sign it." The bill, which "is named after Delaware's late attorney general and former Vice President Joe Biden's son who died in 2015 following a battle with brain cancer," is similar to a measure "that Beau Biden had proposed in 2013 but which ended up failing in the state Senate."

Share to Twitter (4/25, York) reports, "New gun control measures have been passed in" Delaware and Maryland "that will allow police to temporarily seize firearms from people deemed to be a danger to themselves or others." The measures "are just the latest in a string of efforts in at least a dozen states to create safer gun policies following the mass shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in February, and gun control activists say the movement to pass these sorts of bills shows that the efforts are continuing to gain momentum."

Toronto Attacker Possibly Tied To "Incel" Community.

Incel, short for "involuntary celibates," was a term created 20 years ago by a woman who "hoped [her website] would provide a supportive outlet for lonely hearts." In the years since the phrase was created, it has been "co-opted by online trolls and violent misogynists, including allegedly Alek Minassian, the driver accused of killing 10 people in Toronto on Monday." The article says the online incel community "spent Tuesday celebrating the attack he is alleged to have carried out." The <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042601iacp&r=7963908-359b&l=022-c7a&t=c> Independent (UK) <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042601iacp&r=7963908-359b&l=023-47c&t=c> Share to Facebook <http://mailview.bulletinmedia.com/mailview.aspx?m=2018042601iacp&r=7963908-359b&l=024-621&t=c> Share to Twitter (4/25, Sharman) reports Minassian is "believed to have posted on Facebook praising 'incel' killer Elliot Rodger only minutes before 10 people were mown down and killed in the Canadian city on Monday." In 2014, Rodger "killed six people and injured 13 in California, having raged online at women for rejecting him, also using the term 'incel,' before taking his own life."

In Las Vegas, "city leaders have called for the installation of hundreds of additional barriers between the streets and sidewalks along the strip." However, law enforcement "cannot protect every block in every city," and officials "say it also takes a mix of intelligence gathering and public awareness to keep the public safe."

New Zealand Police To Hold Training In New Area To Reach Potential New Recruits.

The recruits are a "trial wing being run from Tamaki Makarau in a bid to bolster police numbers in the city and attract recruits who have been held back or put off joining the organisation in the past due to the training being held in Wellington." Royal New Zealand Police College Inspector Iain Saunders "said the pilot came about following direct feedback from potential recruits, whom for many said that moving to Wellington for 16 weeks was a real barrier to joining police - particularly those with young children or family or personal commitments." Saunders "said Auckland was the biggest and most demanding policing area in the country and it made sense to recruit police from the city who could go straight in and work after training without having to worry about relocating their whole lives and getting to know a place they've never lived or worked before."

New Hampshire US Attorney Scott Murray "said Wednesday the operation, allegedly headed by Sergio and Raulin Martinez, used dispatchers and distributors to channel fentanyl from Lawrence, Massachusetts, into New Hampshire." Murray "said authorities believe it's the largest fentanyl case to be prosecuted in the district," and "he said 32 people from the Lawrence area and 13 from New Hampshire were indicted."

Prosecutors "charged 28-year-old Sergio Martinez and 36-year-old Raulin Martinez - along with 27 other Massachusetts residents and 15 New Hampshire residents - with participating in a conspiracy to distribute fentanyl and possession with intent to distribute fentanyl, a statement from the New Hampshire Department of Justice's office said. 'Fentanyl is responsible for the lion's share of overdose deaths in the Granite State,'" Murray said in a statement. The Globe adds, "the Martinez brothers allegedly worked out of a 'base' in Lawrence that was staffed by dispatchers who took drug orders over several 'customer phones,'" and "the dispatchers would then arrange meetings between customers and distributors located throughout the Merrimack Valley, according to the statement."

Share to Twitter (4/26, Ravani, Gutierrez, Lyons and Haigney) reports, "A onetime cop who's been living quietly in the Sacramento suburbs was fingered Wednesday as the 'East Area Rapist,' with authorities saying DNA helped link him to a string of at least 12 slayings and 45 rapes that terrorized communities in the Bay Area and across California from 1976 to 1986." Joseph James DeAngelo, a "police officer in Placer and Tulare counties at the time some of the crimes were committed, was arrested in what had been one of the most heinous unsolved crime sprees in U.S. history." In addition to the homicides and rapes, authorities "suspect DeAngelo committed more than 150 home break-ins across the state." Sacramento County District Attorney Anne Marie Schubert is quoted as saying, "It is fitting that today is National DNA Day. ... We found the needle in the haystack, and it was right here in Sacramento." Law enforcement agencies across California "formed a task force in 2016, after Schubert held a news conference to mark the 40-year anniversary of the first known crime." While not providing specific details on how DeAngelo was caught, Sacramento Sheriff Scott Jones "said examination of old crime-scene DNA had narrowed the suspects."

Share to Twitter (4/25, Greenwood) reports, "The FBI and California state officials issued a renewed call to find the suspected attacker in 2016, offering a $50,000 reward for information leading to the attacker's arrest and conviction." The Hill quotes Sean Ragan, special agent in charge at the FBI's Sacramento field office, saying, "Countless hours have gone into this investigation, and this team came together and worked consistently to bring justice in this matter and to identify the subject responsible."

The AP adds, "Although it's unusual for serial killers to stop, Jones said they have no reason to think DeAngelo continued to commit crimes after 1986, when the last rape and killing occurred in Orange County." The AP also reported, "FBI agents and other investigators were gathering evidence at DeAngelo's neatly kept home on Wednesday."

International Police Effort Leads To Shutdown Of Webstresser.org.

Law enforcement officials "say that administrators of Webstresser.org were arrested Tuesday, in Britain, Croatia, Canada and Serbia." The service was "taken offline and its hardware was seized in the United States, the Netherlands and Germany, officials said." Customers "allegedly paid Webstresser to carry out cyberattacks on financial institutions, governments and law enforcement agencies using a method known as a Distributed Denial of Service, or DDoS, bombarding a site with a flood of requests to overwhelm it, according to Europol." The investigation, called Operation Power Off, was "led by the Dutch police and Britain's National Crime Agency, with support from Europol and other law enforcement agencies." The head of Europol's European Cybercrime Center Steven Wilson "said the rise of cyberattacks for hire will require a deepened level of international cooperation."

The Beau Biden Gun Violence Protection Act would allow police to temporarily seize firearms from someone deemed a danger to themselves or others by mental health professionals." The measure "now heads to the desk of Gov. John Carney (D), who has said he will sign it." The bill, which "is named after Delaware's late attorney general and former Vice President Joe Biden's son who died in 2015 following a battle with brain cancer," is similar to a measure "that Beau Biden had proposed in 2013 but which ended up failing in the state Senate."

Share to Twitter (4/25, York) reports, "New gun control measures have been passed in" Delaware and Maryland "that will allow police to temporarily seize firearms from people deemed to be a danger to themselves or others." The measures "are just the latest in a string of efforts in at least a dozen states to create safer gun policies following the mass shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in February, and gun control activists say the movement to pass these sorts of bills shows that the efforts are continuing to gain momentum."

Toronto Attacker Possibly Tied To "Incel" Community.

Incel, short for "involuntary celibates," was a term created 20 years ago by a woman who "hoped [her website] would provide a supportive outlet for lonely hearts." In the years since the phrase was created, it has been "co-opted by online trolls and violent misogynists, including allegedly Alek Minassian, the driver accused of killing 10 people in Toronto on Monday." The article says the online incel community "spent Tuesday celebrating the attack he is alleged to have carried out." In Las Vegas, "city leaders have called for the installation of hundreds of additional barriers between the streets and sidewalks along the strip." The recruits are a "trial wing being run from Tamaki Makarau in a bid to bolster police numbers in the city and attract recruits who have been held back or put off joining the organisation in the past due to the training being held in Wellington." Royal New Zealand Police College Inspector Iain Saunders "said the pilot came about following direct feedback from potential recruits, whom for many said that moving to Wellington for 16 weeks was a real barrier to joining police - particularly those with young children or family or personal commitments." Saunders "said Auckland was the biggest and most demanding policing area in the country and it made sense to recruit police from the city who could go straight in and work after training without having to worry about relocating their whole lives and getting to know a place they've never lived or worked before."

US Charges 45 People On Drug Charges In New England.

New Hampshire US Attorney Scott Murray "said Wednesday the operation, allegedly headed by Sergio and Raulin Martinez, used dispatchers and distributors to channel fentanyl from Lawrence, Massachusetts, into New Hampshire." Murray "said authorities believe it's the largest fentanyl case to be prosecuted in the district," and "he said 32 people from the Lawrence area and 13 from New Hampshire were indicted."

Prosecutors "charged 28-year-old Sergio Martinez and 36-year-old Raulin Martinez - along with 27 other Massachusetts residents and 15 New Hampshire residents - with participating in a conspiracy to distribute fentanyl and possession with intent to distribute fentanyl, a statement from the New Hampshire Department of Justice's office said. 'Fentanyl is responsible for the lion's share of overdose deaths in the Granite State,'" Murray said in a statement. The Globe adds, "the Martinez brothers allegedly worked out of a 'base' in Lawrence that was staffed by dispatchers who took drug orders over several 'customer phones,'" and "the dispatchers would then arrange meetings between customers and distributors located throughout the Merrimack Valley, according to the statement."

(4/26, Ravani, Gutierrez, Lyons and Haigney) reports, "A onetime cop who's been living quietly in the Sacramento suburbs was fingered Wednesday as the 'East Area Rapist,' with authorities saying DNA helped link him to a string of at least 12 slayings and 45 rapes that terrorized communities in the Bay Area and across California from 1976 to 1986." Joseph James DeAngelo, a "police officer in Placer and Tulare counties at the time some of the crimes were committed, was arrested in what had been one of the most heinous unsolved crime sprees in U.S. history." In addition to the homicides and rapes, authorities "suspect DeAngelo committed more than 150 home break-ins across the state." Sacramento County District Attorney Anne Marie Schubert is quoted as saying, "It is fitting that today is National DNA Day. ... We found the needle in the haystack, and it was right here in Sacramento." Law enforcement agencies across California "formed a task force in 2016, after Schubert held a news conference to mark the 40-year anniversary of the first known crime." While not providing specific details on how DeAngelo was caught, Sacramento Sheriff Scott Jones "said examination of old crime-scene DNA had narrowed the suspects."

Law enforcement officials "say that administrators of Webstresser.org were arrested Tuesday, in Britain, Croatia, Canada and Serbia." The service was "taken offline and its hardware was seized in the United States, the Netherlands and Germany, officials said." Customers "allegedly paid Webstresser to carry out cyberattacks on financial institutions, governments and law enforcement agencies using a method known as a Distributed Denial of Service, or DDoS, bombarding a site with a flood of requests to overwhelm it, according to Europol." The investigation, called Operation Power Off, was "led by the Dutch police and Britain's National Crime Agency, with support from Europol and other law enforcement agencies." The head of Europol's European Cybercrime Center Steven Wilson "said the rise of cyberattacks for hire will require a deepened level of international cooperation."

The Beau Biden Gun Violence Protection Act would allow police to temporarily seize firearms from someone deemed a danger to themselves or others by mental health professionals." The measure "now heads to the desk of Gov. John Carney (D), who has said he will sign it." The bill, which "is named after Delaware's late attorney general and former Vice President Joe Biden's son who died in 2015 following a battle with brain cancer," is similar to a measure "that Beau Biden had proposed in 2013 but which ended up failing in the state Senate."

Incel, short for "involuntary celibates," was a term created 20 years ago by a woman who "hoped [her website] would provide a supportive outlet for lonely hearts." In the years since the phrase was created, it has been "co-opted by online trolls and violent misogynists, including allegedly Alek Minassian, the driver accused of killing 10 people in Toronto on Monday." The article says the online incel community "spent Tuesday celebrating the attack he is alleged to have carried out." The Independent (UK)

The recruits are a "trial wing being run from Tamaki Makarau in a bid to bolster police numbers in the city and attract recruits who have been held back or put off joining the organisation in the past due to the training being held in Wellington." Royal New Zealand Police College Inspector Iain Saunders "said the pilot came about following direct feedback from potential recruits, whom for many said that moving to Wellington for 16 weeks was a real barrier to joining police - particularly those with young children or family or personal commitments." Saunders "said Auckland was the biggest and most demanding policing area in the country and it made sense to recruit police from the city who could go straight in and work after training without having to worry about relocating their whole lives and getting to know a place they've never lived or worked before."

New Hampshire US Attorney Scott Murray "said Wednesday the operation, allegedly headed by Sergio and Raulin Martinez, used dispatchers and distributors to channel fentanyl from Lawrence, Massachusetts, into New Hampshire." Murray "said authorities believe it's the largest fentanyl case to be prosecuted in the district," and "he said 32 people from the Lawrence area and 13 from New Hampshire were indicted."

Prosecutors "charged 28-year-old Sergio Martinez and 36-year-old Raulin Martinez - along with 27 other Massachusetts residents and 15 New Hampshire residents - with participating in a conspiracy to distribute fentanyl and possession with intent to distribute fentanyl, a statement from the New Hampshire Department of Justice's office said. 'Fentanyl is responsible for the lion's share of overdose deaths in the Granite State,'" Murray said in a statement. The Globe adds, "the Martinez brothers allegedly worked out of a 'base' in Lawrence that was staffed by dispatchers who took drug orders over several 'customer phones,'" and "the dispatchers would then arrange meetings between customers and distributors located throughout the Merrimack Valley, according to the statement."

(4/25, Harlow, Byrne) reports that "a Somerset County sheriff's corporal was shot and killed Wednesday morning on U.S. Route 2 in Norridgewock - the first killing of Maine police officer in a shooting in nearly 30 years - and the suspect remained at large as dozens of police joined in a sprawling, frantic manhunt across the region." According to Central Maine, "the victim was 62-year-old Cpl. Eugene Cole, Sheriff Dale Lancaster said at a news conference Wednesday morning in Norridgewock." The suspect, "who remained at large and is considered by police to be 'armed and extremely dangerous,' was identified as John Williams, 29, of Madison." Central Maine notes that "several law enforcement agencies - including the Somerset Sheriffs Office, FBI and Maine State Police Major Crimes Unit - converged Wednesday night outside a house on Jones Street in Madison, apparently to execute a search warrant."

reports, "A onetime cop who's been living quietly in the Sacramento suburbs was fingered Wednesday as the 'East Area Rapist,' with authorities saying DNA helped link him to a string of at least 12 slayings and 45 rapes that terrorized communities in the Bay Area and across California from 1976 to 1986." Joseph James DeAngelo, a "police officer in Placer and Tulare counties at the time some of the crimes were committed, was arrested in what had been one of the most heinous unsolved crime sprees in U.S. history." In addition to the homicides and rapes, authorities "suspect DeAngelo committed more than 150 home break-ins across the state." Sacramento County District Attorney Anne Marie Schubert is quoted as saying, "It is fitting that today is National DNA Day. ... We found the needle in the haystack, and it was right here in Sacramento." Law enforcement agencies across California "formed a task force in 2016, after Schubert held a news conference to mark the 40-year anniversary of the first known crime." While not providing specific details on how DeAngelo was caught, Sacramento Sheriff Scott Jones "said examination of old crime-scene DNA had narrowed the suspects."

Law enforcement officials "say that administrators of Webstresser.org were arrested Tuesday, in Britain, Croatia, Canada and Serbia." The service was "taken offline and its hardware was seized in the United States, the Netherlands and Germany, officials said." Customers "allegedly paid Webstresser to carry out cyberattacks on financial institutions, governments and law enforcement agencies using a method known as a Distributed Denial of Service, or DDoS, bombarding a site with a flood of requests to overwhelm it, according to Europol." The investigation, called Operation Power Off, was "led by the Dutch police and Britain's National Crime Agency, with support from Europol and other law enforcement agencies." The head of Europol's European Cybercrime Center Steven Wilson "said the rise of cyberattacks for hire will require a deepened level of international cooperation."

The legislation "would allocate more money to expand the center's research on recent school shootings and use that research to train local law enforcement officers and school personnel on how to detect and prevent potential violent threats to schools."

The Beau Biden Gun Violence Protection Act would allow police to temporarily seize firearms from someone deemed a danger to themselves or others by mental health professionals." The measure "now heads to the desk of Gov. John Carney (D), who has said he will sign it." The bill, which "is named after Delaware's late attorney general and former Vice President Joe Biden's son who died in 2015 following a battle with brain cancer," is similar to a measure "that Beau Biden had proposed in 2013 but which ended up failing in the state Senate."

Incel, short for "involuntary celibates," was a term created 20 years ago by a woman who "hoped [her website] would provide a supportive outlet for lonely hearts." In the years since the phrase was created, it has been "co-opted by online trolls and violent misogynists, including allegedly Alek Minassian, the driver accused of killing 10 people in Toronto on Monday." The recruits are a "trial wing being run from Tamaki Makarau in a bid to bolster police numbers in the city and attract recruits who have been held back or put off joining the organisation in the past due to the training being held in Wellington." Royal New Zealand Police College Inspector Iain Saunders "said the pilot came about following direct feedback from potential recruits, whom for many said that moving to Wellington for 16 weeks was a real barrier to joining police - particularly those with young children or family or personal commitments." Saunders "said Auckland was the biggest and most demanding policing area in the country and it made sense to recruit police from the city who could go straight in and work after training without having to worry about relocating their whole lives and getting to know a place they've never lived or worked before."

New Hampshire US Attorney Scott Murray "said Wednesday the operation, allegedly headed by Sergio and Raulin Martinez, used dispatchers and distributors to channel fentanyl from Lawrence, Massachusetts, into New Hampshire." Prosecutors "charged 28-year-old Sergio Martinez and 36-year-old Raulin Martinez - along with 27 other Massachusetts residents and 15 New Hampshire residents - with participating in a conspiracy to distribute fentanyl and possession with intent to distribute fentanyl, a statement from the New Hampshire Department of Justice's office said. 'Fentanyl is responsible for the lion's share of overdose deaths in the Granite State,'" Murray said in a statement. The Globe adds, "the Martinez brothers allegedly worked out of a 'base' in Lawrence that was staffed by dispatchers who took drug orders over several 'customer phones,'" and "the dispatchers would then arrange meetings between customers and distributors located throughout the Merrimack Valley, according to the statement."

During a phone call with reporters, Cuyahoga Falls Police Chief Jack Davis "said stories of officers in Norwalk, East Liverpool and Cleveland being hospitalized after on-the-job fentanyl exposure have stopped police from conducting field tests on unknown powders they encounter." Senator Brown "said the Providing Officers with Electronic Resources, or POWER Act, that he's introducing with Ohio Republican Sen. Share to Twitter (4/26, Ravani, Gutierrez, Lyons and Haigney) reports, "A onetime cop who's been living quietly in the Sacramento suburbs was fingered Wednesday as the 'East Area Rapist,' with authorities saying DNA helped link him to a string of at least 12 slayings and 45 rapes that terrorized communities in the Bay Area and across California from 1976 to 1986." Joseph James DeAngelo, a "police officer in Placer and Tulare counties at the time some of the crimes were committed, was arrested in what had been one of the most heinous unsolved crime sprees in U.S. history." In addition to the homicides and rapes, authorities "suspect DeAngelo committed more than 150 home break-ins across the state." Sacramento County District Attorney Anne Marie Schubert is quoted as saying, "It is fitting that today is National DNA Day. ... We found the needle in the haystack, and it was right here in Sacramento." Law enforcement agencies across California "formed a task force in 2016, after Schubert held a news conference to mark the 40-year anniversary of the first known crime." While not providing specific details on how DeAngelo was caught, Sacramento Sheriff Scott Jones "said examination of old crime-scene DNA had narrowed the suspects."

Law enforcement officials "say that administrators of Webstresser.org were arrested Tuesday, in Britain, Croatia, Canada and Serbia." The service was "taken offline and its hardware was seized in the United States, the Netherlands and Germany, officials said." Customers "allegedly paid Webstresser to carry out cyberattacks on financial institutions, governments and law enforcement agencies using a method known as a Distributed Denial of Service, or DDoS, bombarding a site with a flood of requests to overwhelm it, according to Europol." The investigation, called Operation Power Off, was "led by the Dutch police and Britain's National Crime Agency, with support from Europol and other law enforcement agencies." The head of Europol's European Cybercrime Center Steven Wilson "said the rise of cyberattacks for hire will require a deepened level of international cooperation."

The recruits are a "trial wing being run from Tamaki Makarau in a bid to bolster police numbers in the city and attract recruits who have been held back or put off joining the organisation in the past due to the training being held in Wellington." Royal New Zealand Police College Inspector Iain Saunders "said the pilot came about following direct feedback from potential recruits, whom for many said that moving to Wellington for 16 weeks was a real barrier to joining police - particularly those with young children or family or personal commitments." Saunders "said Auckland was the biggest and most demanding policing area in the country and it made sense to recruit police from the city who could go straight in and work after training without having to worry about relocating their whole lives and getting to know a place they've never lived or worked before."

New Hampshire US Attorney Scott Murray "said Wednesday the operation, allegedly headed by Sergio and Raulin Martinez, used dispatchers and distributors to channel fentanyl from Lawrence, Massachusetts, into New Hampshire." Murray "said authorities believe it's the largest fentanyl case to be prosecuted in the district," and "he said 32 people from the Lawrence area and 13 from New Hampshire were indicted."

Prosecutors "charged 28-year-old Sergio Martinez and 36-year-old Raulin Martinez - along with 27 other Massachusetts residents and 15 New Hampshire residents - with participating in a conspiracy to distribute fentanyl and possession with intent to distribute fentanyl, a statement from the New Hampshire Department of Justice's office said. 'Fentanyl is responsible for the lion's share of overdose deaths in the Granite State,'" Murray said in a statement. The Globe adds, "the Martinez brothers allegedly worked out of a 'base' in Lawrence that was staffed by dispatchers who took drug orders over several 'customer phones,'" and "the dispatchers would then arrange meetings between customers and distributors located throughout the Merrimack Valley, according to the statement."

reports, "A onetime cop who's been living quietly in the Sacramento suburbs was fingered Wednesday as the 'East Area Rapist,' with authorities saying DNA helped link him to a string of at least 12 slayings and 45 rapes that terrorized communities in the Bay Area and across California from 1976 to 1986." Joseph James DeAngelo, a "police officer in Placer and Tulare counties at the time some of the crimes were committed, was arrested in what had been one of the most heinous unsolved crime sprees in U.S. history." In addition to the homicides and rapes, authorities "suspect DeAngelo committed more than 150 home break-ins across the state." Sacramento County District Attorney Anne Marie Schubert is quoted as saying, "It is fitting that today is National DNA Day. ... We found the needle in the haystack, and it was right here in Sacramento." Law enforcement agencies across California "formed a task force in 2016, after Schubert held a news conference to mark the 40-year anniversary of the first known crime." While not providing specific details on how DeAngelo was caught, Sacramento Sheriff Scott Jones "said examination of old crime-scene DNA had narrowed the suspects."

Law enforcement officials "say that administrators of Webstresser.org were arrested Tuesday, in Britain, Croatia, Canada and Serbia." The service was "taken offline and its hardware was seized in the United States, the Netherlands and Germany, officials said." Customers "allegedly paid Webstresser to carry out cyberattacks on financial institutions, governments and law enforcement agencies using a method known as a Distributed Denial of Service, or DDoS, bombarding a site with a flood of requests to overwhelm it, according to Europol." The investigation, called Operation Power Off, was "led by the Dutch police and Britain's National Crime Agency, with support from Europol and other law enforcement agencies." The head of Europol's European Cybercrime Center Steven Wilson "said the rise of cyberattacks for hire will require a deepened level of international cooperation."

The Beau Biden Gun Violence Protection Act would allow police to temporarily seize firearms from someone deemed a danger to themselves or others by mental health professionals." The measure "now heads to the desk of Gov. John Carney (D), who has said he will sign it." The bill, which "is named after Delaware's late attorney general and former Vice President Joe Biden's son who died in 2015 following a battle with brain cancer," is similar to a measure "that Beau Biden had proposed in 2013 but which ended up failing in the state Senate."

The recruits are a "trial wing being run from Tamaki Makarau in a bid to bolster police numbers in the city and attract recruits who have been held back or put off joining the organisation in the past due to the training being held in Wellington." Royal New Zealand Police College Inspector Iain Saunders "said the pilot came about following direct feedback from potential recruits, whom for many said that moving to Wellington for 16 weeks was a real barrier to joining police - particularly those with young children or family or personal commitments." Saunders "said Auckland was the biggest and most demanding policing area in the country and it made sense to recruit police from the city who could go straight in and work after training without having to worry about relocating their whole lives and getting to know a place they've never lived or worked before."

'Fentanyl is responsible for the lion's share of overdose deaths in the Granite State,'" Murray said in a statement. BODY-WORN CAMERAS

Washington Post: Facial recognition may be coming to a police body camera near you

The country's biggest seller of police body cameras on Thursday convened a corporate board devoted to the ethics and expansion of artificial intelligence, a major new step toward offering controversial facial-recognition technology to police forces nationwide. Axon, the maker of Taser electroshock weapons and the wearable body cameras now used by most major American city police departments, has voiced interest in pursuing face recognition for its body-worn cameras. The technology could allow officers to scan and recognize the faces of potentially everyone they see while on patrol. A growing number of surveillance firms and tech start-ups are racing to integrate face recognition and other AI capabilities into real-time video.

DNA

San Francisco Chronicle: Detectives in Golden State Killer case used genealogical sites to nab suspect

Investigators broke open the long-stagnant case of the prolific serial killer and rapist known as the Golden State Killer by mining DNA profiles collected by genealogical websites used by individuals to trace family heritage, the Sacramento County district attorney's office said Thursday. Law enforcement had long had a DNA profile of the suspected killer, which helped them connect murders and rapes across the state to the same unidentified man. But, the DNA profile did not match any contained in criminal databases that are used by law enforcement throughout the U.S. to link crimes to suspects. The explosion in recent years of DNA heritage websites such as 23andMe and Ancestry.com provided investigators with another tool, although both of those companies said Thursday they were not involved in this case. DNA experts said the use of genealogical websites is a controversial and unorthodox method to solving crimes, one that could pose ethical questions if it involves a commercial company where users have an expectation of privacy.

OPIOIDS

Mother Jones: America's fentanyl problem is reaching a whole new group of users

Alongside deaths involving fentanyl-laced heroin, overdoses involving cocaine and fentanyl-without the heroin-are quietly rising. Many medical examiner's offices don't specify the exact drug combinations found in the bodies of overdose victims, but data compiled by Mother Jones found an increase in cocaine-fentanyl deaths in four places that track these specifics: Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York City, and Cuyahoga County in Ohio.

MENTAL ILLNESS

Tennessean: Waffle House shooting: What happens when Nashville police respond to calls about mental illness

About twice a day, Nashville law enforcement and mental health professionals work together to evaluate if someone with a mental illness is a safety threat. Under state and federal law, social workers and mental health counselors can recommend a judge order someone to spend time at a psychiatric hospital. Such an order prohibits that person from having firearms, potentially forever. But forced commitments are rarely deemed necessary: In 2015, less than 1.5 percent of all Nashville police calls that involved a psychological evaluation resulted in an arrest or involuntary committal. Even when someone makes threats, police and mental health professionals must evaluate intent and ability to cause harm. It's not an exact science, explained local police trainers and mental health professionals. Packed psychiatric facilities, limited resources and little information doesn't make the job any easier.

GUN REGULATIONS

Reuters: Waffle House shooting shows pitfalls in patchwork of U.S. gun laws

When Travis Reinking's semi-automatic rifle was confiscated after his attempt to enter the White House last year, he simply moved from Illinois to nearby Tennessee where signs of mental illness are no bar to gun ownership. How and when Reinking's father returned the AR-15-style weapon and other firearms to his 29-year-old son, accused of shooting dead four people and wounding four at a Waffle House restaurant in Nashville, Tennessee remain unclear. Confusing as well are the myriad of U.S. state gun laws that can make it difficult to stop crimes like Sunday's mass shooting.

TECHNOLOGY

PIX 11 New York: Residents asked to watch, report crimes after Newark rolls out surveillance cameras citywide

Newark is rolling out what it calls "block watch on steroids" - a high-tech way for residents to virtually patrol their blocks and report anything suspicious anonymously to police. Sixty cameras have gone up across the city and residents can log on to view live streams from any of those locations after logging in here by clicking 'citizen virtual patrol' in the upper right hand corner.

LICENSE PLATE READERS

Washington Post: Virginia Supreme Court revives challenge to police storage of license plate reader data

A challenge to the Fairfax County police storage of data collected by automated license plate readers, thrown out by a county judge in 2016, was revived by the Virginia Supreme Court on Thursday. The court ruled that the photos snapped by the readers constitute "personal information" that might not be legally retained by the police, depending on further investigation by the courts. The case could ultimately affect every police department in Virginia that uses the license plate readers, in terms of how long they can keep the data the readers generate.

DRUG ENFORCEMENT

USA Today: Trump White House is months late on required strategy on drugs despite declared emergency

Six months after President Trump declared the opioid crisis a public health emergency, the White House office charged with overseeing his administration's response has failed to come up with a congressionally mandated strategy to address it. The Office of National Drug Control Policy, a 30-year-old division of the White House whose director is commonly known as the "drug czar," is months late with a strategy report that is supposed to lay out a plan for curbing addiction and assess whether agencies are making progress toward that goal.

HUMAN TRAFFICKING

Reuters: Technology a double-edged sword for human traffickers: Europol head

Modern technologies, from messaging services such as WhatsApp to cryptocurrencies, are fuelling the rise of modern slavery across Europe yet new digital tools are also helping police to fight back against traffickers, the head of Europol said on Thursday. While advances in technology have enabled traffickers and international gangs to target more victims, expand their illicit businesses and conceal crimes, they leave behind virtual traces for law enforcement to follow, said Europe's policing agency. But limited digital expertise and experience mean that police are struggling to keep up and tackle the $150-billion-a-year trade that is estimated to enslave about 40 million people worldwide, said outgoing executive director Rob Wainwright.

Investigators broke open the long-stagnant case of the prolific serial killer and rapist known as the Golden State Killer by mining DNA profiles collected by genealogical websites used by individuals to trace family heritage, the Sacramento County district attorney's office said Thursday. Law enforcement had long had a DNA profile of the suspected killer, which helped them connect murders and rapes across the state to the same unidentified man. But, the DNA profile did not match any contained in criminal databases that are used by law enforcement throughout the U.S. to link crimes to suspects. The explosion in recent years of DNA heritage websites such as 23andMe and Ancestry.com provided investigators with another tool, although both of those companies said Thursday they were not involved in this case. DNA experts said the use of genealogical websites is a controversial and unorthodox method to solving crimes, one that could pose ethical questions if it involves a commercial company where users have an expectation of privacy.

Alongside deaths involving fentanyl-laced heroin, overdoses involving cocaine and fentanyl-without the heroin-are quietly rising. Many medical examiner's offices don't specify the exact drug combinations found in the bodies of overdose victims, but data compiled by Mother Jones found an increase in cocaine-fentanyl deaths in four places that track these specifics: Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York City, and Cuyahoga County in Ohio.

About twice a day, Nashville law enforcement and mental health professionals work together to evaluate if someone with a mental illness is a safety threat. Under state and federal law, social workers and mental health counselors can recommend a judge order someone to spend time at a psychiatric hospital. Such an order prohibits that person from having firearms, potentially forever. But forced commitments are rarely deemed necessary: In 2015, less than 1.5 percent of all Nashville police calls that involved a psychological evaluation resulted in an arrest or involuntary committal. Even when someone makes threats, police and mental health professionals must evaluate intent and ability to cause harm. It's not an exact science, explained local police trainers and mental health professionals. Packed psychiatric facilities, limited resources and little information doesn't make the job any easier.

When Travis Reinking's semi-automatic rifle was confiscated after his attempt to enter the White House last year, he simply moved from Illinois to nearby Tennessee where signs of mental illness are no bar to gun ownership. How and when Reinking's father returned the AR-15-style weapon and other firearms to his 29-year-old son, accused of shooting dead four people and wounding four at a Waffle House restaurant in Nashville, Tennessee remain unclear. Confusing as well are the myriad of U.S. state gun laws that can make it difficult to stop crimes like Sunday's mass shooting.

<[A challenge to the Fairfax County police storage of data collected by automated license plate readers, thrown out by a county judge in 2016, was revived by the Virginia Supreme Court on Thursday. The court ruled that the photos snapped by the readers constitute "personal information" that might not be legally retained by the police, depending on further investigation by the courts. The case could ultimately affect every police department in Virginia that uses the license plate readers, in terms of how long they can keep the data the readers generate.](https://clicks.memberclicks-mail.net/wf/click?upn=j3dAOGmkEKUelBShsKEM-2BJso9e57TEQA-2FDTodizlMRd2muBLGPctTpSKHYt0xk9-2Bt3-2BnZkmEG3eKMH14hE7V1KLExB7fRYDLprzM54zSSAEIyeL0S0UQUvlop9Mn8LZ7_mHfaMGDSSOiBrZOSBeca8NqECsurHdPguJcPtyxJiQS9u03zHRltFPkztxngrlYLRgulMisqP4xHzKAu5RWotciZdBm9rLtlLfi01BLZ073YQIlr0ArHyZq7A13cYHxCXCWNSGcBVialR9U4MZ-2F-2BDumXQwYH6zUzod-2Fss79glsRn4G4RWV7QOt-2FNT-2Fjsasn0LEYQ7Rmjzq9dWcFh-2BeUVTDrrnDP56eeWuuU-2Bau8QJkIOFkF87HQvz-2Bf3S321IO1kfBUP5foAXQqGMYy7qCCEHCs40C8rv1mRQ7x5BmHzobiekMUonMGW5KQtGb5LC9X6987qwZhx68moQsUU6h2cCg-3D-3D><div data-bbox=)

Six months after President Trump declared the opioid crisis a public health emergency, the White House office charged with overseeing his administration's response has failed to come up with a congressionally mandated strategy to address it. The Office of National Drug Control Policy, a 30-year-old division of the White House whose director is commonly known as the "drug czar," is months late with a strategy report that is supposed to lay out a plan for curbing addiction and assess whether agencies are making progress toward that goal.

Modern technologies, from messaging services such as WhatsApp to cryptocurrencies, are fuelling the rise of modern slavery across Europe yet new digital tools are also helping police to fight back against traffickers, the head of Europol said on Thursday. While advances in technology have enabled traffickers and international gangs to target more victims, expand their illicit businesses and conceal crimes, they leave behind virtual traces for law enforcement to follow, said Europe's policing agency. But limited digital expertise and experience mean that police are struggling to keep up and tackle the $150-billion-a-year trade that is estimated to enslave about 40 million people worldwide, said outgoing executive director Rob Wainwright.

BODY-WORN CAMERAS

Washington Post: Facial recognition may be coming to a police body camera near you

The country's biggest seller of police body cameras on Thursday convened a corporate board devoted to the ethics and expansion of artificial intelligence, a major new step toward offering controversial facial-recognition technology to police forces nationwide. Axon, the maker of Taser electroshock weapons and the wearable body cameras now used by most major American city police departments, has voiced interest in pursuing face recognition for its body-worn cameras. The technology could allow officers to scan and recognize the faces of potentially everyone they see while on patrol. A growing number of surveillance firms and tech start-ups are racing to integrate face recognition and other AI capabilities into real-time video.

DNA

San Francisco Chronicle: Detectives in Golden State Killer case used genealogical sites to nab suspect

Investigators broke open the long-stagnant case of the prolific serial killer and rapist known as the Golden State Killer by mining DNA profiles collected by genealogical websites used by individuals to trace family heritage, the Sacramento County district attorney's office said Thursday. Law enforcement had long had a DNA profile of the suspected killer, which helped them connect murders and rapes across the state to the same unidentified man. But, the DNA profile did not match any contained in criminal databases that are used by law enforcement throughout the U.S. to link crimes to suspects. The explosion in recent years of DNA heritage websites such as 23andMe and Ancestry.com provided investigators with another tool, although both of those companies said Thursday they were not involved in this case. DNA experts said the use of genealogical websites is a controversial and unorthodox method to solving crimes, one that could pose ethical questions if it involves a commercial company where users have an expectation of privacy.

OPIOIDS

Mother Jones: America's fentanyl problem is reaching a whole new group of users

Alongside deaths involving fentanyl-laced heroin, overdoses involving cocaine and fentanyl-without the heroin-are quietly rising. Many medical examiner's offices don't specify the exact drug combinations found in the bodies of overdose victims, but data compiled by Mother Jones found an increase in cocaine-fentanyl deaths in four places that track these specifics: Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York City, and Cuyahoga County in Ohio.

MENTAL ILLNESS

Tennessean: Waffle House shooting: What happens when Nashville police respond to calls about mental illness

About twice a day, Nashville law enforcement and mental health professionals work together to evaluate if someone with a mental illness is a safety threat. Under state and federal law, social workers and mental health counselors can recommend a judge order someone to spend time at a psychiatric hospital. Such an order prohibits that person from having firearms, potentially forever. But forced commitments are rarely deemed necessary: In 2015, less than 1.5 percent of all Nashville police calls that involved a psychological evaluation resulted in an arrest or involuntary committal. Even when someone makes threats, police and mental health professionals must evaluate intent and ability to cause harm. It's not an exact science, explained local police trainers and mental health professionals. Packed psychiatric facilities, limited resources and little information doesn't make the job any easier.

GUN REGULATIONS

Reuters: Waffle House shooting shows pitfalls in patchwork of U.S. gun laws

When Travis Reinking's semi-automatic rifle was confiscated after his attempt to enter the White House last year, he simply moved from Illinois to nearby Tennessee where signs of mental illness are no bar to gun ownership. How and when Reinking's father returned the AR-15-style weapon and other firearms to his 29-year-old son, accused of shooting dead four people and wounding four at a Waffle House restaurant in Nashville, Tennessee remain unclear. Confusing as well are the myriad of U.S. state gun laws that can make it difficult to stop crimes like Sunday's mass shooting.

TECHNOLOGY

PIX 11 New York: Residents asked to watch, report crimes after Newark rolls out surveillance cameras citywide

Newark is rolling out what it calls "block watch on steroids" - a high-tech way for residents to virtually patrol their blocks and report anything suspicious anonymously to police. Sixty cameras have gone up across the city and residents can log on to view live streams from any of those locations after logging in here by clicking 'citizen virtual patrol' in the upper right hand corner.

LICENSE PLATE READERS

Washington Post: Virginia Supreme Court revives challenge to police storage of license plate reader data

A challenge to the Fairfax County police storage of data collected by automated license plate readers, thrown out by a county judge in 2016, was revived by the Virginia Supreme Court on Thursday. The court ruled that the photos snapped by the readers constitute "personal information" that might not be legally retained by the police, depending on further investigation by the courts. The case could ultimately affect every police department in Virginia that uses the license plate readers, in terms of how long they can keep the data the readers generate.

DRUG ENFORCEMENT

USA Today: Trump White House is months late on required strategy on drugs despite declared emergency

Six months after President Trump declared the opioid crisis a public health emergency, the White House office charged with overseeing his administration's response has failed to come up with a congressionally mandated strategy to address it. The Office of National Drug Control Policy, a 30-year-old division of the White House whose director is commonly known as the "drug czar," is months late with a strategy report that is supposed to lay out a plan for curbing addiction and assess whether agencies are making progress toward that goal.

HUMAN TRAFFICKING

Reuters: Technology a double-edged sword for human traffickers: Europol head

Modern technologies, from messaging services such as WhatsApp to cryptocurrencies, are fuelling the rise of modern slavery across Europe yet new digital tools are also helping police to fight back against traffickers, the head of Europol said on Thursday. While advances in technology have enabled traffickers and international gangs to target more victims, expand their illicit businesses and conceal crimes, they leave behind virtual traces for law enforcement to follow, said Europe's policing agency. But limited digital expertise and experience mean that police are struggling to keep up and tackle the $150-billion-a-year trade that is estimated to enslave about 40 million people worldwide, said outgoing executive director Rob Wainwright.

Mother Jones: America's fentanyl problem is reaching a whole new group of users

Alongside deaths involving fentanyl-laced heroin, overdoses involving cocaine and fentanyl-without the heroin-are quietly rising. Many medical examiner's offices don't specify the exact drug combinations found in the bodies of overdose victims, but data compiled by Mother Jones found an increase in cocaine-fentanyl deaths in four places that track these specifics: Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York City, and Cuyahoga County in Ohio.

MENTAL ILLNESS

Tennessean: Waffle House shooting: What happens when Nashville police respond to calls about mental illness

About twice a day, Nashville law enforcement and mental health professionals work together to evaluate if someone with a mental illness is a safety threat. Under state and federal law, social workers and mental health counselors can recommend a judge order someone to spend time at a psychiatric hospital. Such an order prohibits that person from having firearms, potentially forever. But forced commitments are rarely deemed necessary: In 2015, less than 1.5 percent of all Nashville police calls that involved a psychological evaluation resulted in an arrest or involuntary committal. Even when someone makes threats, police and mental health professionals must evaluate intent and ability to cause harm. It's not an exact science, explained local police trainers and mental health professionals. Packed psychiatric facilities, limited resources and little information doesn't make the job any easier.

GUN REGULATIONS

Reuters: Waffle House shooting shows pitfalls in patchwork of U.S. gun laws

When Travis Reinking's semi-automatic rifle was confiscated after his attempt to enter the White House last year, he simply moved from Illinois to nearby Tennessee where signs of mental illness are no bar to gun ownership. How and when Reinking's father returned the AR-15-style weapon and other firearms to his 29-year-old son, accused of shooting dead four people and wounding four at a Waffle House restaurant in Nashville, Tennessee remain unclear. Confusing as well are the myriad of U.S. state gun laws that can make it difficult to stop crimes like Sunday's mass shooting.

TECHNOLOGY

PIX 11 New York: Residents asked to watch, report crimes after Newark rolls out surveillance cameras citywide

Newark is rolling out what it calls "block watch on steroids" - a high-tech way for residents to virtually patrol their blocks and report anything suspicious anonymously to police. Sixty cameras have gone up across the city and residents can log on to view live streams from any of those locations after logging in here by clicking 'citizen virtual patrol' in the upper right hand corner.

LICENSE PLATE READERS

Washington Post: Virginia Supreme Court revives challenge to police storage of license plate reader data

A challenge to the Fairfax County police storage of data collected by automated license plate readers, thrown out by a county judge in 2016, was revived by the Virginia Supreme Court on Thursday. The court ruled that the photos snapped by the readers constitute "personal information" that might not be legally retained by the police, depending on further investigation by the courts. The case could ultimately affect every police department in Virginia that uses the license plate readers, in terms of how long they can keep the data the readers generate.

DRUG ENFORCEMENT

USA Today: Trump White House is months late on required strategy on drugs despite declared emergency

Six months after President Trump declared the opioid crisis a public health emergency, the White House office charged with overseeing his administration's response has failed to come up with a congressionally mandated strategy to address it. The Office of National Drug Control Policy, a 30-year-old division of the White House whose director is commonly known as the "drug czar," is months late with a strategy report that is supposed to lay out a plan for curbing addiction and assess whether agencies are making progress toward that goal.

HUMAN TRAFFICKING

Reuters: Technology a double-edged sword for human traffickers: Europol head

Modern technologies, from messaging services such as WhatsApp to cryptocurrencies, are fuelling the rise of modern slavery across Europe yet new digital tools are also helping police to fight back against traffickers, the head of Europol said on Thursday. While advances in technology have enabled traffickers and international gangs to target more victims, expand their illicit businesses and conceal crimes, they leave behind virtual traces for law enforcement to follow, said Europe's policing agency. But limited digital expertise and experience mean that police are struggling to keep up and tackle the $150-billion-a-year trade that is estimated to enslave about 40 million people worldwide, said outgoing executive director Rob Wainwright.

OFFICER SAFETY

FOX 31 Denver: 137 officers have been killed over 10 years while wearing body armor

Why are so many police officers being murdered while wrapped in the protection of body armor? It's a question that's been on the minds of Colorado this year after the gunshot deaths of three deputies, in three different departments, over a five-week period. To find answers, the FOX31 Investigative Team started by reading the FBI's "Law Enforcement Officers Killed & Assaulted" or LEOKA files connected with every peace officer death in America over ten years - more than 400 cases. Patterns emerged with two key findings.

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

USA Today: Mass shootings prompt surge of calls to domestic violence hotline about armed abusers

Calls to the National Domestic Violence Hotline involving firearms were up more than 75% in 2017, according to an analysis out Monday by the hotline. The surge, which followed a year that had a 50% increase in gun-related domestic violence reports, is attributed to increased publicity surrounding mass shootings. Women are calling to say, "My husband may be capable of a mass shooting," Hotline CEO Katie Ray-Jones says.

POLICE EXECUTIVE APPOINTMENTS

Los Angeles Times: Bucking precedent, Garcetti won't name three finalists for LAPD chief

The names of three finalists for Los Angeles police chief have been forwarded to Mayor Eric Garcetti, who is bucking recent precedent by declining to name them. The Police Commission, which oversees the Los Angeles Police Department, announced Monday that it had sent the names to Garcetti. The five-member civilian commission moved quickly after interviewing five candidates - all department veterans - last week. There were 31 applicants for the job. Deciding who will lead the country's second-largest police department is now up to the mayor.

GANGS

Washington Post: 'Heinous and violent': MS-13's appeal to girls grows as gang becomes 'Americanized'

Unlike their counterparts in Central America, some MS-13 cliques in the United States now allow female members, said Michael Prado, assistant special agent in charge of the Washington office of Homeland Security Investigations, a branch of Immigration and Customs Enforcement. In response, ICE has begun instructing its agents to scrutinize girls and young women as closely as males for MS-13 involvement, Prado said.

COURT CASES

Arizona Republic: 9th Circuit Court says Maricopa County is liable for Arpaio's actions

It may be a moot point by now, but on Monday, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rebuffed a Maricopa County argument that it was not liable for the racial-profiling traffic-stop policies of former Sheriff Joe Arpaio, which have already cost the county millions.

TECHNOLOGY

The Guardian: Welsh police wrongly identify thousands as potential criminals

A police force has defended its use of facial recognition technology after it was revealed that more than 2,000 people in Cardiff during the 2017 Champions League final were wrongly identified as potential criminals. The cameras scan faces in a crowd and compare them against a database of custody images. As 170,000 people arrived in the Welsh capital for the football match between Real Madrid and Juventus, 2,470 potential matches were identified. However, according to data on the force's website, 92% of those were found to be "false positives."

OVERSIGHT

Charleston Post and Courier: Charleston Police to face more scrutiny with new citizens committee, independent review

The city of Charleston is making progress on two strategies to build more trust between the Charleston Police Department and the people it serves, particularly minorities. The city has launched its search for an independent firm to review the department's policing practices and identify any racial biases that might be at work when officers are in the field. In addition, City Council on Tuesday is expected to approve the creation of a new Citizen Police Advisory Council, a group that would serve as a liaison between the community and the police department.
